nant that still lingered, in sorrow, amidst the ruins of the temple, after Jeremiah was carried down from Mizpah to Egypt (Je. 43. 6), and is it not, most probably, an expression of regret for that rebellious act of abduction? C.

Ver. 17. Summer and winter. Therefore the God by whose power the glory of light emerges from the deformity of darkness, and the beauty of summer from the desolation of winter, is able to grant deliverance from enemies, and bring comfort out of sorrow. See ver. 10. C.

Ver. 20. 'The prayer in this passage may with propriety be used by the people of God now. It is still true that 'the dark parts of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty;' and in view of this fact, and of the utter hopelessness of the renovation of the world by any human means, or by any progress which society can make of itself, it is proper to seek God's interposition. And it is proper in such prayers to him now, to make the ground of our appeal to him his own gracious covenant; his promises made to his church; his solemn assurance that this state of things shall not always continue, but that the time will arrive when the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord' (Barnes). P.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! to what melancholy apprehensions of their state and case are the people of God sometimes reduced! They fear that the rod of his correction is the sword of his judgment. But though he cast them down, he will not forsake believers. They who are redeemed by Jesus' blood should not come under the bondage of corruption. The favours which they have received are a presage, and ought to be made a plea for greater. While worldly minds feel only worldly crosses, the interests of religion and welfare of the church are incomparably dearest to the children of God. And however certain the ruin which will fall upon the destroyers of his church at last, it is extremely affecting to behold them making havoc of God's truths, ordinances, or people, while there is none to comfort us or to explain the dark providences. But under sore troubles it is proper to commemorate and plead upon God's former and distinguished mercies. He who divided the Red Sea and destroyed Pharaoh and his host, and who brought waters from the rock for Israel; he who is the Sovereign of nature, can, at his pleasure, command our and his church's deliverance. Importunate wrestlings and pleadings with God for the relief of his church, which is so dear to him, and for fulfilling his promise, of which he is ever mindful, and for destroying his daring and implacable reproachers, will not be long unanswered.

PSALM LXXV. Ver. 3. The single speaker can be no other than Messiah, prophetically arrived in his church. None but Christ alone could, without vain boasting and arrogance, attribute to himself such mighty power.—Note, The world, with all its institutions, is preserved from ruin merely that Christ may be glorified. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While we think of Jesus Christ, whom God has marvellously crowned with glory and honour, and of the infinite danger of opposing his government, let us remark what wonderful works of God have been exercised to usward. Great is the praise which we owe to God on every review of his mercies. Important and useful is the charge which is committed to magistrates and ministers: and there is great need of activity and care in their administrations, as they must be accountable to God, from whom they received their power. One true patriot may sometimes save a disjointed church or state from impending ruin. But vain and dangerous is it to withstand God's deputies. The righteous shall be advanced and flourish, while obstinate sinners shall be plunged into everlasting misery.

PSALM LXXVI. Ver. 1. In Judah God is known. God was known in the doctrine that expressed his nature—in the commandments that prescribed his will—in the history that recorded his acts—and the prophecy that foretold his coming to salvation, victory, and judgment. C.

Ver. 4. This is a passage of great difficulty. May it not be paraphrased thus: 'Thou Zion, undistinguished among cities, art yet, as the dwelling-place of God, more excellent than them all; and thou, Salem, taught by thy very name to cultivate peace, art yet, in that peace of God, more glorious than the mountains of the warriors—their strongholds and fortresses—enriched and stored with all the spoils of conquest.' C.

Ver. 9. Though spoken of as an event past, these words are evidently a description of a time still future—a mode of speech common with the prophets (see, for example, Is. 5. 3), the time at which God will arise and have mercy upon Zion, and save in his judgment all the meek of the earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are those nations and churches which have the knowledge and presence of God in them! How profitable, pleasant, and enriching! Gloriously he protects them in danger, and destroys their enemies, however mighty or numerous. Their tyrannical oppressors, though like mountains of prey, shall destroy themselves utterly. His meek ones must indeed patiently wait awhile; but at last he will, to the terror of all around, appear for their relief. Whatever his people suffer shall but brighten their graces and

PSALM LXXVII.

1 The psalmist showeth what fierce combat he had with diffidence. 10 The victory which he had by considering God's great and gracious works.

To the chief musician, to [a]Jeduthun, A psalm of[1] Asaph.

I CRIED[b] unto God with my voice, even unto God with my voice; and he gave ear unto me.[2]

2 In[c] the day of my trouble I sought the LORD: my [3]sore[4] ran[d] in the night, and ceased not: [e]my soul refused to be comforted.

3 I[f] remembered God, and was troubled: I[h] complained, and my spirit was overwhelmed. Selah.[5]

4 Thou[i] holdest mine eyes waking: I am so troubled that I cannot speak.

5 I[j] have considered the days of old, the years of ancient times.

6 I call to remembrance my [k]song in the night: [l]I commune with mine own heart; and my spirit made diligent search.

7 Will[n] the LORD cast off for ever? and will he be favourable no more?

8 Is[o] his mercy clean gone for ever? doth his promise fail for evermore?[6]

9 Hath[p] God forgotten to be gracious? hath he in anger shut up his tender mercies? Selah.

10 And I said, [q]This is my infirmity: but I will remember the [r]years of the right hand of the most High.[7]

11 I[s] will remember the works of the LORD; surely I will remember thy wonders of old.

12 I will [t]meditate also of all thy work, and talk of thy doings.[8]

13 Thy[u] way, O God, is in the sanctuary:[9] who[v] is so great a God as our God?

14 Thou[x] art the God that doest wonders: thou[y] hast declared thy strength among the people.

15 Thou[z] hast with thine arm redeemed thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph. Selah.

16 The[a] waters saw thee, O God, the waters saw thee; they were afraid: the depths also were troubled.

17 The clouds poured out water:[1] the skies sent out a sound: thine [b]arrows also went abroad.

18 The[c] voice of thy thunder was in the heaven: the lightnings lightened the world: the earth trembled and shook.

2 This psalm is manifestly the record of an inward struggle in the mind of the writer between good and evil, faith and despair. At first anguish fills his soul, hope seems to desert him, and overwhelmed with affliction he yields himself up to despair. Then, however, memory of past mercies returns; thoughts of divine love and power spring up, and at length hope dawns, and he rejoices in the salvation of the Lord.—P.

PSALM LXXVIII.

1 An exhortation both to learn and to preach the law of God. 9 The story of God's wrath against the incredulous and disobedient. 67 The Israelites being rejected, God chose Judah, Zion, and David.

Maschil of Asaph.[1]

GIVE [a]ear, O [b]my people, to my law:[2] incline your ears to the words of my mouth.

2 I[c] will open my mouth in a parable;[3] I will utter dark sayings of old;[4]

3 Which[d] we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us.

4 We[e] will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the LORD, and his strength, and his wonderful works that he hath done.[5]

5 For[g] he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, [h]that they should make them known to their children:

6 That[i] the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children:

7 That[j] they might set their hope in God, [k]and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments:

8 And might not be [l]as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation that set not their heart aright,[6] and whose spirit was not steadfast with God.

9 The children of Ephraim, being armed, and carrying[7] bows, [n]turned back in the day of battle.

10 They[o] kept not the covenant of God, and refused to walk in his law;

11 And[p] forgat his works, and his wonders that he had showed them.

12 Marvellous[q] things did he in the sight of their fathers, in the land of Egypt, in the field of [r]Zoan.

13 He[s] divided the sea, and caused them to pass through; and he made the waters to stand as an heap.

14 In[t] the day-time also he led them with a cloud, and all the night with a light of fire.

redound to his glory. And whatever of his enemies' fury hath not this tendency he restrains. The more awful our God and our deliverances are, the more ought we to wait on him, fear him, and make and pay grateful vows to him.

PSALM LXXVII. Ver. 1. There is one, and one only, 'whom the Father heareth always,' Jn. 11. 42, and in whose name alone are the prayers of sinners heard—that one is Christ. C.

Ver. 15. The sons of Joseph who was sold into slavery—the sons of Jacob who were brought into it in search of food, and hope of protection and prosperity. The first, the emblem of the natural man, 'sold under sin;' the second, the emblem of the spiritual man, for a time seduced, like Peter, to forget and deny his Lord. C.

Ver. 18. There is here a description of a storm of rain, hail, thunder, and lightning, with most probably an earthquake, not recorded in any of the books of Moses. The occasional supply of such omissions, when thus furnished by the Spirit, is serviceable as reminding us that the Scriptures were written, not to be histories of men, but of God and his government—a consideration that will often solve the most remarkable Scripture difficulties. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What days of trouble saints have to endure from temptations, corruptions, afflictions, and desertions! But in distress we must flee to the compassionate bosom of our God, and pour out our complaints before him. And if we would speed we must be both importunate and unwearied in our application. If we but speak in groans God can understand us and will answer. But often, under strong temptations, saints feed their sorrows and reject the consolations which God suggests to them in his Word: often they indulge the melancholy apprehension that he hath forsaken them and left them to eternal perdition. Terrible then is their case: and dishonourable to God is this their distrust. But hopeful is the appearance when they are brought to condemn their own unbelief, and to cast themselves on his almighty power and mercy; and when they continue meditating on and declaring his former almighty works of providence or grace. This awakens themselves and others to honourable thoughts of his conduct and to grateful praise. However deep and mysterious the dispensations of his providence, they are all holy and just. And however awful, they are infinitely gracious, and issue in the deliverance of believers from their manifold bondage, and in their guidance, by Jesus their great Leader and Priest, to the Canaan above.

PSALM LXXVIII. Ver. 8. Steadfast. Steadfastness is essential to religion, and is equally required in doctrine, testimony, and practice. Versatility and compliance will save for a time from many inconveniences that consistency must bear; but steadfastness will triumph in the end, while Reuben, unstable as water, will never excel. C.

PACIFIC LUTHERAN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

15 He[u] clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths.

16 He brought [v]streams also out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers.

17 And [x]they sinned yet more against him, by provoking the most High in the wilderness.

18 And[y] they tempted God in their heart, by asking meat for their lust.

19 Yea, they spake against God; they said, Can[z] God furnish[8] a table in the wilderness?

20 Behold,[a] he smote the rock, that the waters gushed out, and the streams overflowed; can he give bread also? can he provide flesh for his people?

21 Therefore the LORD heard this, and [b]was wroth; so a fire[9] was kindled against Jacob, and anger also came up against Israel;

22 Because [c]they believed not in God, and trusted not in his salvation;[1]

23 Though he [d]had commanded the clouds from above, and opened the [e]doors of heaven, 24 And[g] had rained down manna upon them to eat, and had given them of the corn of heaven.

25 Man did eat [2]angels'[3] food: he sent them meat to the full.

26 He[h] caused an east wind to blow[4] in the heaven; and by his power he brought in the south wind.

27 He rained flesh also upon them as dust, and feathered fowls[5] like as the sand of the sea;

28 And he let it fall in the midst of their camp, round about their habitations.

29 So[i] they did eat, and were well filled: for he gave them their own desire;

30 They[j] were not estranged from their lust: but while their meat was yet in their mouths,

31 The wrath of God came upon them, and slew the fattest of them, and smote down[6] the chosen men[7] of Israel.

32 For[k] all this they sinned still, and believed not for his wondrous works.

33 Therefore[l] their days did he consume in vanity, and their years in trouble.

34 When[n] he slew them, then they sought him; and they returned and inquired early after God:

35 And they remembered [o]that God was their Rock, and the high God their Redeemer.

36 Nevertheless[p] they did flatter him with their mouth, and they lied unto him with their tongues.

37 For[q] their heart was not right with him, neither were they [r]steadfast in his covenant.

38 But he, [s]being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity, and destroyed them not; [t]yea, many a time turned he his anger away, and did not stir up all his wrath.

39 For[u] he remembered that they were but flesh; a wind that passeth away, and cometh not again.

40 How[v] oft did they provoke him[8] in the wilderness, and grieve him in the desert!

41 Yea,[x] they turned back[9] and tempted God, and limited[1] the Holy One of Israel.

42 They remembered not [y]his hand, nor the day when he delivered them from the enemy.[2]

43 How[z] he had wrought[3] his signs in Egypt, and his wonders in the field of Zoan;

44 And[a] had turned their rivers into blood; and their floods, that they could not drink.

45 He[b] sent divers sorts of flies among them, which devoured[4] them; and [c]frogs, which destroyed them.

46 He[d] gave also their increase unto the caterpillar,[5] and their labour unto the locust.

47 He[e] destroyed[6] their vines with hail, and their sycamore-trees[7] with frost.[8]

48 He gave up[9] their cattle also to the hail, and their flocks to hot thunderbolts.[1]

49 He[g] cast upon them the fierceness of his anger, wrath, and indignation, and trouble, by sending evil angels[2] among them.

50 He made a way[3] to his anger; he spared

Ver. 9. Ephraim. Ephraim is selected to exemplify the result of unsteadiness, (1) Because, as the chief son of Joseph, he inherited peculiar promises, Ge. 48. 20. (2) Because Ephraim was the ruling tribe at entering Canaan under Joshua. (3) Because Ephraim attained to supreme power in the ten tribes, Is. 7. 9. (4) Because Ephraim became conspicuous among the tribes for dissolution of morals and idolatry, Is. 17. 28; Ho. 8. 11. (5) Because in their danger they sought not God, but Assyria, Ho. 5. 13. And (6) Because God visited them with calamities as conspicuous as the privileges they abused, Ho. 5. 9, 12. C.

Ver. 32. To many unthinking persons it appears strange, almost, if not altogether, beyond credibility, that the Israelites could receive so many mercies, and feel so many judgments, and yet remain the sensual, stupid, stiff-necked, rebellious, and incorrigible people they are represented to have been. A little consideration of the disregard of God's mercies and judgments that may still be seen in the world would soon remove this surprise or incredulity, and enforce the conviction, that the providence of God, and the blindness and rebellion of men, still continue, as in the days of Moses, to refuse to be enlightened, and to spurn the hand that relieves and feeds them. C.

Ver. 34. When he slew them, &c. That is, when he was slaying them, then, out of fear, they sought him; an occurrence every day exemplified in sick-bed professions of sorrow for past sins, and resolutions of amendment for the future—professions and resolutions that are often forgotten so soon as returning health prepares the way for renewed temptation. C.

Ver. 57. Deceitful bow. The eastern bow is ordinarily composed of several pieces of different elastic materials, and when unstrung is recurved nearly into the form of a hoop; and, if the elastic tendency of the curvature vary in the least from the plane of the string, the bow, when the arrow is discharged, will unstring itself and spring back, and the arrow will fall at the feet of the archer. C.

Ver. 59. When God heard this. We know little more of the relations between men and angels, than that 'they are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' and that there is 'joy in heaven over one sinner that repenteth'—but these words seem also to intimate that the idolatries and other apostasies of the church may be brought up in heavenly records, or—if such in heaven there may be—even in holy lamentations 'to the ears of the God of Sabaoth.' C.

Ver. 64. No lamentation. It has often been remarked that among the many evils of continued public calamities, none is more grievous than the almost total destruction of sympathy and natural affection, and the paramount domination of selfishness. No instance can be more remarkable than that of a widow whose heart has been rendered so callous that she drops no tear of sorrow to the memory of the husband of her youth! C.

REFLECTIONS.—Important are the great things of God's law and the matters of our eternal salvation; and they demand the most serious attention. With great care ought parents to instruct children in the knowledge of the great truths and works of God. Neglect of this issues in children's unbelief, hypocrisy, and lasting ruin. And to avoid the bad effects of parents' guilt, children of wicked men ought to be doubly careful to avoid imitating them. How weak men are when God is their enemy; and how cowardly when their consciences are burdened with guilt! No miracles, however gracious and striking, can melt an ignorant and hardened heart, or induce it to gratitude. No favours will satisfy a discontented spirit, and restrain its malicious murmurings against God. With amazing patience and kindness God provides for his abusers amongst mankind! But when he gratifies sinners in their requests, his gifts become their snare and curse: this world's abundance is abused to excess: reflection is banished: and men hurry headlong into ruin. They who make a god of their belly will find their end to be destruction: and they who will not be bowed by mercies or corrections must be broken by judgments. If sin be indulged sorrow must follow. Nor shall the stoutest be able to resist the uplifted arm of an angry God. Troubles often force men to their profession, prayers, or tears, whose wickedness is quickly thereafter discovered. The danger is scarcely blown over when all their convictions and promises are forgotten and contemned.—O the infinite compassion and patience of God towards all professing people! But, alas! his most singular favours and tremendous judgments are soon forgotten and despised!—The creatures of God sometimes become means, and in the most fearful manner cover his enemies with ruin. But abundant returns of thankfulness, love, and service are due to him from those to whom he has been liberal of his favours. How ready are most to imitate their wicked progenitors, to the dishonour of their gracious God! But more fearfully criminal is the unfaithfulnot their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence;[4]

51 And[h] smote all the first-born in Egypt; the chief of their strength in the tabernacles of Ham:[i]

52 But[j] made his own people to go forth like sheep, and guided them in the wilderness like a flock.[5]

53 And[k] he led them on safely, so that they feared not: but the sea [l]overwhelmed[6] their enemies.

54 And he brought them [m]to the border of his sanctuary,[7] even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased.

55 He[o] cast out the heathen also before them, and divided them an inheritance by line,[8] and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents.

56 Yet[p] they tempted and provoked the most high God, and kept not his testimonies:

57 But[q] turned back, and dealt unfaithfully like their fathers: they were turned aside [r]like a deceitful bow.

58 For[s] they provoked him to anger with their high places, and moved him to jealousy with their graven images.

59 When God [t]heard this, he [u]was wroth, and greatly abhorred Israel:

60 So[v] that he forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh, the tent which he placed among men;

61 And delivered his strength[9] into captivity, and his glory into the enemy's hand.[1]

62 He[x] gave his people over also unto the sword; and was wroth with his inheritance.

63 The[y] fire consumed their young men; and their maidens were not given[2] to marriage.

64 Their[z] priests fell by the sword; and their widows made no lamentation.

65 Then[a] the LORD awaked as one out of sleep, and like a mighty man that shouteth by reason of wine:

66 And he [b]smote his enemies in the hinder parts; he put them to a perpetual reproach.

67 Moreover [c]he refused the tabernacle of Joseph, and chose not the tribe of Ephraim:

68 But[d] chose the tribe of Judah, the mount Zion which he loved.

69 And[e] he built his sanctuary like high palaces, like the earth which he hath established[3] for ever.[4]

5 The figure is equally beautiful and graphic. The eastern shepherd goes before his sheep, and they follow him. He leads them to the best pastures, along the safest paths, and to the choicest fountains. He keeps off all danger, meets and drives away wild beasts that would destroy and devour. So did God with Israel in the wilderness. In the cloudy pillar by day and the fiery pillar by night he led them. He made them encamp by the fountains in the desert. PSALM LXXIX.

1 The psalmist complaineth of the desolation of Jerusalem. [c] prayeth for deliverance, 13 and promiseth thankfulness.

A psalm of[1] Asaph.

O GOD, [a]the heathen are come into [b]thine inheritance; [c]thy holy temple have they defiled; they have laid Jerusalem on heaps.

2 The[d] dead bodies of thy servants have they given to be meat unto the fowls of the heaven, the flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth.

3 Their blood have they shed like water round about Jerusalem; [e]and there was none to bury them.

4 We[g] are become a reproach to our neighbours, a scorn and derision to them that are round about us.

5 How[h] long, LORD? wilt thou be angry for ever? [i]shall thy jealousy burn like fire?

6 Pour[j] out thy wrath upon the heathen that have not known thee,[2] and upon the kingdoms that have not called upon thy name.

7 For[k] they have devoured Jacob, and laid waste his dwelling-place.

8 O[l] remember not against us former iniquities:[3] let[n] thy tender mercies speedily prevent us;[4] for we are brought very low.

9 Help[o] us, O God of our salvation, for the glory of thy name;[5] and deliver us, and purge away our sins, for thy name's sake.

10 Wherefore[p] should the heathen say, Where is their God? [q]let him be known among the heathen in our sight by the [6]revenging[7] of the blood of thy servants which is shed.

11 Let[r] the sighing of the prisoner[8] come before thee: [s]according to the greatness of thy power[9] preserve thou those that are appointed to [1]die:[2]

12 And [t]render unto our neighbours sevenfold into their bosom[3] their [u]reproach, wherewith they have reproached thee, O LORD.

13 So[v] we thy people, and sheep of thy pasture, will give thee thanks for ever; we will [x]show forth thy praise to all generations.[4]

ness of those who profess to serve him; it draws tremendous destruction upon the transgressors. If we forsake God he will forsake us; and no tabernacle, no formalities in religion, can avail us when he is departed. —But however sharply he corrects faithful people, he hath still mercy in store for them. They who triumph over them a little shall quickly have their glory turned to shame: and he will maintain a church to himself for ever. If to punish one nation he remove their gospel candlestick, he will send the light of his truth to another, and often the most unlikely. And not David, but Jesus Christ, shall for ever feed God's flock of ransomed men, according to the integrity of his heart and good skill of his hands.

PSALM LXXIX. Ver. 1. There is no internal note of the precise date of this psalm, and conjecture is useless. It is enough to know that it records some one of those lamentable occasions upon which a righteous God gave up to judgment a backsliding and forgetful church. But let the Gentile churches recollect that such judgments are not confined to Israel, but are prophetically suspended over themselves, should they fall into the Jewish sins of self-righteousness and unbelief, Ro. 9. 31; 10. 3; 11. 20, 21. C.

Ver. 5. These words may have been, and probably were, descriptive of the ravages of the Babylonians, when the first temple was destroyed and Jerusalem laid waste; but they were also prophetic of more terrible calamities in the distant future. To this day the poor Jews assemble at stated times outside the massive wall of the ancient temple area, and, wailing, chant these lines. P.

REFLECTIONS.—To what fearful and lasting distress and desolation is the church of God sometimes brought, while forced to bear at once the cruelty and derision of men and the manifested displeasure of God! But he will assuredly visit with his wrath such as live in ignorance of him and neglect of his worship. And though he permit his people to be oppressed for a while, he will speedily rid them of their persecutors; and often their extremity ushers in their deliverance. Humble prayers for forgiveness, poured forth in sighs and groans, and attended with deep concern for God's dishonour, will not be long unanswered. And deliverances, founded in pardon through Jesus' blood, will animate to cordial praise and thankfulness.

2 It would appear from verses 3 and 4 that this psalm was intended for the public service of the temple or sanctuary, on the great annual festivals in the seventh month. The month was ushered in by a solemn sabbath—'a memorial of blowing of trumpets,' Le. 23. 24. On the tenth of the same month was the feast of atonement; on the fifteenth the feast of tabernacles, or of ingathering, which lasted seven days.—P.

PSALM LXXX. Ver. 1. Leadest Jacob. In the pastoral countries of the East, the flock intrusted to a shepherd is generally under a hundred (see Mat. 18. 12); because it must be sedulously watched, and kept within the view of the shepherd, for fear of the predatory bands by whom these countries are infested. The shepherd accordingly teaches his flock to know his voice, come at his call—he leads them, and they follow his movements, Jn. 10. 27. C.

Ver. 2. Before Ephraim—Joseph's first-born, by divine election; before Benjamin, Joseph's beloved brother; before Manasseh, his first-born in point of time, but placed last by divine appointment, to teach families that the Lord reigneth in all their arrangements. These three tribes marched immediately before the Kohathites who carried the ark, Nu. 2. 17–24; 10. 21–24. C.

Ver. 13. The boar, &c. This is a literal representation of fact at this day in some of the vine districts of the East, especially in Mesopotamia. In the lips of a Jew, the words had a meaning doubly emblematic of the persecutors of the church, as represented not merely by a destructive but an unclean animal. C.

Ver. 17. Man of thy right hand. Let thy hand, anointing him to office and power, by the Holy Ghost, be upon Messiah, the man who is to be exalted to thy 'right hand'—the 'Son of man' who comes to redeem the world. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the mercy that God is the shepherd, leader, and protector of his people—that he is a God reconciled in Christ, to the everlasting wonder of angels and men—and that now it is not the Jewish tribes who marched after the ark in the desert, but multitudes of Gentiles, that see his salvation. Awakened souls ardently desire reconciliation with God, and repeated manifestations of his favour. And if we are turned to God by faith, we cannot fail to inherit his eternal glory. But through seeming rejection of prayers and angry frowns from God, and through tears, griefs, and reproaches, must we sometimes go thither. With what kind care did God settle the Israelites in Canaan and make them flourish there! With how much more did he gather, found, and increase his gospel church! But, alas! the misery and ruin that sin draws down upon the best-constituted churches and nations. Enemies, furious as wild beasts, waste them when God withdraws his protection. Yet the design hereof is not his people's ruin; but to excite their prayers, quicken their repentance, and magnify the wonders of his power and grace in their deliverance. It is impossible for his church to be ruined when her help is laid on her almighty Redeemer, the man of God's right hand. God's love for us is the source of all our salvation, quickening, and blessedness of grace. Through him strengthening us, we can do all things. No wonder then that prayer is the daily employment of such as are spiritually alive; and that a sense of God's favour is more earnestly desired than the removal of any affliction.

PSALM LXXXI. Ver. 1. God is called the God of Jacob, in reference to the following circumstances in Jacob's history:—(1) He was a specimen, representative, or type of the electing grace of God, Ro. 9. 11. (2) He learned, by grace, to prize the birthright. (3) He was willing to purchase it with his food, the representative of his life. (4) He was forced into exile, and became a stranger, a pilgrim. (5) He was tried with hard measures by his friends. (6) He was a faithful servant. (7) He was an affectionate husband and parent. (8) He was a bold wrestler in prayer—utterly refusing to resign without a blessing. (9) He was the father of a numerous progeny. (10) He was, in the fulfilment of prophecy, and the designs of Providence, led down into Egypt. (11) He was brought up from it after death—an emblem of deliverance by the resurrection. (12) He rested in the land of promise. C.

Ver. 5. Understood not. Messiah, as prophet, is the speaker, and so speaks, as when he shall say to the wicked, 'I never knew you.' C.

Ver. 10. Ask what you need; make any request consonant with my holy will, and the granting of which will promote your own welfare, and I will liberally respond to every wish, and bestow to the utmost extent of your desire. 'There is not a want of our nature—of our bodies or our souls; a want pertaining to this life or the life to come—to ourselves, to our families, to our friends, to the church, or to our country—which God is not able to meet; and there is not a real necessity in any of these respects which he is not willing to meet.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—God's saving relations are a delightful foundation of our warmest praise. Deliverances from God, as well as his authoritative command, oblige us to a punctual observance of his ordinances of worship. And nothing can do it more effectually than our eternal redemption through Christ. How ready is God to help and to save those who call upon him in trouble! And all our obedience is delightfully founded.

thee out of the land of Egypt: [r]open thy mouth wide, and I will fill it.

11 But[s] my people would not hearken to my voice; and Israel would none of me.[9]

12 So[t] I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust;[1] and they walked in their own counsels.

13 Oh[u] that my people had hearkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways!

14 I should soon have subdued [v]their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries.

15 The haters of the LORD should have submitted themselves[2] unto him: [x]but their time[3] should have endured for ever.

16 He [y]should have fed them also with the finest of the wheat:[4] and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee.

PSALM LXXXII.

1 The psalmist, having exhorted the judges, 5 and reproved their misconduct, 8 prayeth God to judge.

A psalm of Asaph.[1]

2 How long will ye [b]judge unjustly, and accept the persons of the wicked? Selah.[3]

3 Defend[4] the poor and fatherless: do justice to the afflicted and needy.

4 Deliver[c] the poor and needy: rid them out of the hand of the wicked.

5 They[d] know not, neither will they understand; they walk on in darkness: [e]all the foundations of the earth are out of course.[5]

6 I[g] have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High:[6]

7 But[h] ye shall die like men, and fall like one of the princes.[7]

8 Arise,[i] O God, judge the earth: for [j]thou shalt inherit all nations.

on his gospel grant of himself to us as OUR GOD. His service must then be our highest interest as well as duty. Past obligations are sufficient to engage our hearts, even though we had no future promises in view. And when God grants himself and his fulness, our desires or prayers for enjoyment can never be too much enlarged. They only who have him for their portion have all that heart can wish. But how terrible is the punishment of a wilful refusal of his gracious offers! What loss of victory over enemies, of perpetuated enjoyments, and of delightful provision! Alas! what enemies are sinners to their own souls! And they who resist God's Word and Spirit have only their own wilfulness to blame when their destruction comes. Their perishing is not through want of compassion in God, but through the hardness and impenitence of their own hearts.

PSALM LXXXII. Ver. 1. Among the gods. That is, among kings, judges, and magistrates, who are called gods, as bound by oath to execute justice; as God has bound himself by oath, for consolation of the 'heirs of promise." He. 6.17. C.

Ver. 5. Foundations. The principal foundations of society are truth, justice and mercy; and that these are continually out of course, is manifest in this, that the greatest efforts of human wisdom and power, either are, or pretend to be, employed in preserving or restoring them. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dignified is the office of magistrates, as the deputies of God. And with solemn awe and strict equity ought they to fix their decisions, as in God's presence, and as accountable to him. Yet how commonly do they indulge themselves in injustice and partiality! For want of substance to procure right to themselves the poor are ordinarily trampled on; but God is their guardian; and, let magistrates do their worst, he will at last redress the grievances of his poor ones. The high station and mighty influence of magistrates shall not long protect them from death; nor, if wicked, from damnation. If our rulers then be wicked, let us give ourselves to prayer, that God may rectify matters, and subdue the world to the righteous government of his Son.

PSALM LXXXIII. Ver. 2. To hate the God of philosophical imagination may be deemed impossible; but to hate the God of truth, holiness, and grace, is the very constitution of every unrenewed heart. Ro. 8. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To quicken his people's importunity in prayer the Lord sometimes appears for a time to disregard their distress. Whatever pretences men make for their opposition to God's people, the real cause is their enmity against God himself, whose holiness they cannot endure, and whose image they cannot but hate. But while saints are hid with Christ in God, no enemy can really hurt them. Wicked men, though

PSALM LXXXV.

1 The psalmist, out of the experience of former mercies, prayeth for the continuance thereof. 8 He promiseth to wait God's answer, in confidence of his manifold blessings.

To the chief musician, A psalm for[1] the sons of Korah.

5 Wilt[g] thou be angry with us for ever? wilt thou draw out thine anger to all generations?

diversified by nations, humours, or interests, strongly unite in opposing the cause of God and truth. Glad would they be if neither preacher nor professor of the true religion were left upon earth. But though craft be employed to seduce, threatenings to intimidate, and fury to extirpate, the foundation of God standeth sure. God knoweth them that believe, and they shall never be moved. At the worst they have their all-sufficient Lord to flee to, who can check the madness of the devourers. And past interpositions of God in favour of his people should encourage us to plead and hope for the like mercy. All opposition to God and his church is but rushing headlong into certain ruin. Even in this life, sinners' terrors of mind often make their life a burden, and are a presage of more dreadful misery in hell for ever. Men must know at last that the Lord omnipotent reigneth; and the execution of deserved judgment on the ungodly but shows the tendency of sin. Meanwhile we ought to long for the conviction and conversion of our bitterest enemies of mankind, rather than their destruction.

PSALM LXXXIV. Ver. 3. Even is not in the Hebrew. The words between yea and young should rather be taken as a parenthesis, and the meaning stands thus—'My heart cries out for the living God, for thine altars, O Lord of hosts,' &c. That birds could not build in the altars, is evident both from their construction and constant use; nor can altars be put for courts, for they are already mentioned. The longing of the psalmist is for the altar of sacrifice, the one great sacrifice that perfects for ever them that are sanctified. He. 10. 12, 14. C.——'The idea here is, that the sparrows and the swallows seemed to have a happy lot; to be in a condition to be envied. Even they might come freely to the place where God was worshipped—to the very altars—and make their home there undisturbed. How strangely in contrast with this was the condition of the wandering—the exiled—author of the psalm!' (Barnes). P.

Ver. 6. Baca. Not any particular place; for the people, in ascending to the festivals, could not all pass through any one valley. It signifies, 'valley of weeping,' the emblem of the life of 'the Man of Sorrows,' 'in the fellowship of whose sufferings' every pilgrim of Zion must partake, Phi. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 5–7. The meaning of this difficult passage is probably this:—'Blessed is the man whose strength (or trust) is in thee, whose heart rejoiceth at the prospect of following the way to thy house. Even when passing through the vale of misery—through sorrow and suffering and persecution—make it as a well (or fountain of delight), and the early rain falleth upon it, and covereth it with verdure. They go from strength, and at length appear before God perfect in Zion. P.——Every one of them in Zion appeareth before God. 'The God of gods will appear to them.' (Williams). C.

Ver. 8. Give ear, O God of Jacob. See note on Ps. 81. 1. Christ here personally intercedes for the church, and him 'the Father heareth always,' Jn. 11. 42. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What inexpressible beauty gracious souls see in holiness and in holy work! Fellowship with God in Christ, in his ordinances, is the delight, the desire of their soul. The meanest abode, with his presence and ordinances, is preferred to a palace without them. Not only faithful ministers who attend to their work, but all who study a life of close fellowship with God, and faithful service of him, increase their joy in the Lord and their strength for his work. If our heart be once engaged we can walk with pleasure in God's ways, and in attending his solemn ordinances. However troublesome the way to heaven be, not one of those who truly set out need faint or miscarry. And O the inexpressible glories they there enjoy in the immediate vision and presence of God! If he be our own and our father's God we shall never seek him in vain. If he be our shield we shall be safe from fear of evil. If our confidence towards him be founded solely on the merit and intercession of Jesus his Anointed, he cannot but behold us in mercy and love. Infinitely preferable is fellowship with God in his ordinances, to all the pleasures of sin or sense that can be enjoyed on earth: and happy are those who have God ALL IN ALL to them, bestowing ALL on them; and who, in all cases, depend for ALL they need only upon him.

PSALM LXXXV. Ver. 2. This psalm must be descriptive of the times and sacrifice of Messiah; for at no other period did God 'cover all the sin' of his church. See Ro. 4. 7, 23–25. C.

Ver. 5. The believing remnant of the Jews here intercede for their unbelieving 'brethren, their kinsmen according to the flesh,' during the long dispersion that has succeeded the crucifixion of our Lord. C.

Ver. 11. Under a broken law there is no righteousness, except the finished work of Christ, in which all holy commandment was fulfilled, and the penalty of death endured. Righteousness looked down from heaven when Christ ascended, and 'through the eternal Spirit presented himself without spot before God.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Present distress should never obliterate the grateful memory of God's past favours. His pardons of sin, through active faith, are all free, full, and everlasting; and when guilt is removed wrath ceases of course. Though our unfaithfulness may have plunged us into distress, God is rich in mercy and ready to turn us to himself. But no salvation can be hoped for while we continue indulging our sins. And unless he save us freely, through faith in Christ, we are undone forever. Impenitent sinners must undergo eternal pain; but earnest believers are only corrected for a time. Having experienced the power of his quickening and restoring grace, they rejoice in God their Saviour, and speak, to his glory, of the wonders of his grace. And having expected and obtained an answer to their prayers, the peace which God speaks in his promise withdraws their heart from sinning. But how sure was the promise, near the fulfilment, and great the glory of Jesus' incarnation and office! Herein the mercy, faithfulness, and equity of God appear harmoniously and brightly displayed. While Jesus, the truth, grows upward from earth, his righteous Father from heaven beholds him with pleasure. While the gospel and its influences take place among men, JEHOVAH manifests his righteousness in pardoning and blessing us with all spiritual blessings in Christ; in making us to abound in fruits of righteousness to the praise of his glory; and in directing us to Jesus and his law and example, that we may be led into the paths of everlasting peace.

5 For[i] thou, LORD, art good, and ready to forgive; and plenteous in mercy unto all them that call upon thee.

PSALM LXXXVI. Ver. 2. I am holy. 'Thy favoured one' (Mudge). 'Thy gracious saint' (Ainsworth). But, however it may be translated, the confident assertion of the purity of his personal character, proves the speaker either to be a self-deceiving Pharisee, sporting a righteousness he did not possess, or 'Jesus Christ the righteous,' 'the Holy One of Israel.' The former he could not be, the latter therefore he must be. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here behold Jesus as the holy but sacrificial servant of his Father, imploring his favours and triumphing in his praise, let me, in every case, pour forth importunate prayers; place all my confidence in God; lodge all my complaints and requests with him; and ascribe to him the glory of his own perfections, and of all my own and the people's deliverances.

PSALM LXXXVII. Ver. 1. The chief object of this psalm is to show the advantages of religious ordinances and religious training. Especially the psalmist illustrates the great benefit of having been born and educated in the holy city, where God is honoured, and where the enlightening, restraining, and quickening influences of his worship are felt. P.——The Lord's foundation is Christ, 1 Co. 3. 10, upon whom are builded, first apostles and prophets, then the whole church, Ep. 2. 20; and this foundation rests upon the mountains, the high raised strength of the Redeemer's holiness, ver. 2. See Ps. 78. 68. C.

Ver. 4. I will mention Egypt, Ps. 89. 10; Is. 51. 9, 10, whom I judged with many plagues, and whence I delivered my people at the first; and Babylon, which I have doomed to extirpation, because she led Zion captive. Behold, also, Philistia, whose persevering enmity I have foiled and punished; Tyre, that once great city, which I have left a desolate rock—with the whole land of Ethiopia (Cush), which I have swept with successive judgments—and all this I have done for my Zion's sake. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold how firmly and publicly our gospel church is founded upon Jesus Christ the Rock of ages! And how JEHOVAH delights in fellowship with his people in the public and private ordinances of his grace. Glorious things are spoken of her foundation, her ordinances, her members, her properties, her fulness. And under the influence of almighty grace the heathen nations on every side crowd into her. Behold also the exact and kind care which God takes of every true member! And great spiritual joy and rejoicing, and fresh springs of salvation, are found in her by the saints.

PSALM LXXXVIII. Ver. 7. Thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. Surely in the lips of any but Messiah, upon whom 'the Lord laid the iniquities of us all,' these words would be nothing but selfish exaggeration; while in the lips of Messiah they are literally true, and are therefore to be absolutely interpreted of him alone. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How inexpressibly grievous are the afflictions of some of God's loving children! nay, of his Son! Their sorrows are enlarged. They are reduced to the very brink of despair; loaded and thy righteousness in the [v]land of forgetfulness?

13 But[s] unto thee have I cried, O LORD; and in the morning[9] shall my prayer prevent thee.

14 LORD, [t]why castest thou off my soul? why hidest thou thy face from me?[1]

15 I[u] am afflicted and ready to die from my youth up: while [v]I suffer thy terrors I am distracted.

16 Thy[x] fierce wrath[2] goeth over me; thy terrors have cut me off.

17 They[y] came round about me daily[3] like water; they compassed me about together.

18 Lover[z] and friend hast thou put far from me, and mine acquaintance into darkness.

PSALM LXXXIX.

1 The psalmist praiseth God for his covenant, 5 for his wonderful power, 15 for the care of his people, 19 for his favour to the kingdom of David. 38 Then complaining of contrary events, 46 he expostulateth, prayeth, and blesseth God.

Maschil of [a]Ethan the Ezrahite.[1]

I WILL[b] sing of the mercies of the LORD for ever: with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness [2]to all generations.[3]

2 For I have said, [c]Mercy shall be built up for ever: thy faithfulness shalt thou establish in the very heavens.

3 I [d]have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto [e]David my servant,

4 Thy[g] seed will I establish for ever, and build up thy throne to all generations. Selah.[4]

5 And [h]the heavens shall praise thy wonders, O LORD: thy faithfulness also in the congregation of the saints.

6 For [i]who in the heaven can be compared unto the LORD? who among the sons of the mighty can be likened unto the LORD?

7 God[j] is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him.

8 O LORD God of [5]hosts, [k]who is a strong LORD like unto thee? or to thy faithfulness round about thee?

9 Thou[l] rulest the raging of the sea: when the waves thereof arise, thou stillest them.

10 Thou[m] hast broken [6]Rahab[7] in pieces, as one that is slain; thou hast scattered thine enemies with thy strong arm.[8]

11 The[o] heavens are thine, the earth also is thine: as for the world, and the fulness thereof, thou hast founded them.

12 The[p] north and the south thou hast created them: [q]Tabor[9] and Hermon[1] shall [r]rejoice in thy name.

13 Thou hast a mighty arm:[2] strong is thy hand, and high is thy right hand.

14 Justice[s] and judgment are the [3]habitation of thy throne; mercy and truth shall [t]go before thy face.

15 Blessed is the people that know the [u]joyful sound: [v]they shall walk, O LORD, in the light of thy countenance.[4]

16 In[x] thy name shall they rejoice all the day; and [y]in thy righteousness shall they be exalted.

17 For [z]thou art the glory of their strength; and [a]in thy favour our horn shall be exalted.

18 For[b] the LORD is our defence; and the Holy One of Israel is our [5]King.[6]

19 Then thou spakest in vision to thy Holy One, and saidst, [c]I have laid help upon one that is mighty; I have exalted one chosen out of the people.

20 I[d] have found David[7] my servant; with my holy oil have I anointed him:

21 With[e] whom my hand shall be established; mine arm also shall strengthen him.

22 The[g] enemy shall not exact upon him; [h]nor the son of wickedness afflict him.

23 And[i] I will beat down his foes before his face, and plague them that hate him.

24 But[j] my faithfulness and my mercy shall be with him; [k]and in my name shall his horn be exalted.

25 I[l] will set his hand also in the sea, and his right hand in the rivers.

26 He[n] shall cry unto me, Thou art my Father, my God, and the Rock of my salvation.

27 Also I will make him my [o]first-born, higher than the kings of the earth.[8]

28 My[p] mercy will I keep for him for evermore, and my covenant shall stand fast with him.

29 His[q] seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven.[9]

30 If[r] his children forsake my law, and walk not in my judgments;

31 If they break my statutes,[1] and keep not my commandments;

32 Then[s] will I visit their transgression with the rod, and their iniquity with stripes.

33 Nevertheless[t] my loving-kindness will I not utterly take from him,[2] nor suffer my faithfulness to fail.[3]

3 The main object of this psalm is to declare the promises made to David regarding the perpetuityof his throne and kingdom. The promise had a double reference—typical and real. David's line and throne and kingdom were to continue until, in the person, and work, and reign of our Lord, David's great Son, the typical merged into the real—the temporal into the spiritual.—P.

with a sense of deep sorrow; deserted by friends; and, while their case is apparently remediless, their way lies along the road of pain. If I be cast into this depth, let me, though with a trembling heart, still claim the Lord as my God, my Saviour. Let me, with fervent cries and humble expostulations, pour out my complaints into his bosom. The more my afflictions press me, let my supplications be the more pressing and persevering. And if I wish to live longer on earth, let my great end be to serve God's interests and to show forth his praise.

PSALM LXXXIX. Ver. 1. None but Messiah could confidently adopt the opening resolution and prophecy of this verse: of him, accordingly, it has been interpreted by Rabbi Solomon, amongst the Jews; and by Aben Ezra, amongst Jewish converts to Christianity. C.

Ver. 3. In this verse, the Father addresses the Son, whom he designates as 'David my servant:' David signifies beloved, the name given to the Son by the Father from heaven, Mat. 3.17; and the apostolic name by which his justifying grace is commended to the church, Ep. 1.6. And that it applies here, not to David the son of Jesse, but to David's Lord, will appear certain from considering ver. 4, which applies not to the desolated throne of David in Jerusalem, but to the abiding throne of Messiah in glory. C.

Ver. 5. The heavens shall praise thy wonders, O Lord. The comparison of this passage from verse 5–17, with He. 1.10 and Ps. 102.1, 25, will clearly demonstrate that it contains a continued address of the Father to the Son, delivered in prophecy for establishment of the faith of the ancient church. See Lu.1.39. C.

Ver. 30. His children. The church is called Christ's 'children,' He. 2.13, and they are here warned against the terrible judgments upon the various forms of apostasy and infidelity, He. 3.10; infidelity combined with self-righteousness, Ro. 10.3, 11, 15; worldliness, 1 Co. 5.11; final heresy, Tit. 3.10; and impenitence, Re. 2.21–23. C.

Ver. 37. As the moon. A lovely satellite to earth, borrowing and reflecting the light of the sun, and supplying in his absence the lack of his brighter beams; equalizing the temperature of sea

STAIRWAY TO TOWER OF CASTLE—NEAR THE PLACE WHERE CHRIST WAS TRANSFIGURED. [Psalms, lxxxix:12.]—"The North and the South thou hast created them: Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice in thy name." This is a view of the stairway to the tower of Subeibeh castle. It stands three miles from Cæsarea Philippi, and about one thousand feet higher than this town. It is in sight of Mount Hermon, where the Lord Jesus Christ was transfigured in the presence of Peter, James and John. We are looking toward the North. This castle figured largely in the wars of the Saracenes of Damascus against the Templars of Jerusalem. As it commands the passage from the Huleh to the plains of the Jordan over Hermon to Damascus and the East, it must have been a place of importance at least during those troublous times when such passes were dominated by a frowning castle.

34 My[u] covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips.

35 Once[v] have I sworn [w]by my holiness that I will not lie[4] unto David.[5]

36 His[y] seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me.[6]

37 It[z] shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven. Selah.

38 But[a] thou hast cast off and abhorred; thou hast been wroth with thine anointed.[7]

39 Thou[b] hast made void the covenant of thy servant; thou hast profaned his crown, by casting it to the ground.

40 Thou[c] hast broken down all his hedges; thou hast brought his strong holds to ruin.

41 All[d] that pass by the way spoil him: he is a reproach to his neighbours.

42 Thou hast set up the right hand of his adversaries; thou hast made all his enemies to rejoice.

43 Thou hast also turned the edge of his sword, and hast not made him to stand in the battle.

44 Thou[e] hast made his glory[8] to cease, and cast his throne down to the ground.

45 The[g] days of his youth hast thou shortened; thou hast covered him with shame. Selah.

46 How[h] long, LORD? wilt thou hide thyself for ever? shall thy wrath burn like fire?

47 Remember[i] how short my time is: wherefore hast thou made all men in vain?

48 What[j] man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave? Selah.

49 LORD, [k]where are thy former lovingkindnesses, which thou [l]swarest unto David in thy truth?

50 Remember, LORD, [m]the reproach of thy servants; how I do bear in my bosom the reproach of all the mighty people;

51 Wherewith[o] thine enemies have reproached,[9] O LORD; wherewith they have reproached the footsteps of thine anointed.

A prayer of Moses[1] the [a]man of God.

LORD, thou hast been our [b]dwelling-place[2] in all generations.[3]

2 Before[c] the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, [d]even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God.

3 Thou[e] turnest man to destruction; and sayest, Return, ye children of men.

4 For[g] a thousand years in thy sight are but as yesterday when it is past,[4] and as a watch in the night.

5 Thou[h] carriest them away as with a flood; [i]they are as a sleep: in the morning they are [j]like grass which groweth [5]up.[6]

6 In[k] the morning it flourisheth, and groweth up; in the evening it is cut down, and withereth.

7 For[l] we are consumed by thine anger, and by thy wrath are we troubled.

8 Thou[n] hast set our iniquities before thee, our secret sins in the light of thy countenance.

9 For all our days are passed away[7] in [o]thy wrath: we spend our years as a [8]tale[9] that is told.

10 The days of our years are threescore years and ten;[1] and if by reason of strength they be fourscore years, [p]yet is their strength labour and sorrow: for [q]it is soon cut off, and we fly away.

and earth by the rolling tides; measuring out the months of the life of man, and the returns of God's solemn festivals; and 'ruling the night,' as a 'faithful witness in heaven,' that though the sun be withdrawn for a time, his beams are not extinguished. In all which respects, the moon is a beautiful emblem of the covenant grace of God. Some interpret it of the rainbow, but there is no necessity for such straining. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Glorious is that promise of grace which JEHOVAH has made in Jesus Christ as the Head and Representative of all believers. The mercy and faithfulness of God are therein for ever clearly and comfortably manifested; and for ever adored, both in heaven and earth. How infinite are the greatness and majesty of our loving God! How unbounded his strength! No unruly elements in nature, nor outrageous nations of men, can control it. His dominion extends to all parts and ends of the earth; and in a powerful, steady, judicious, righteous, and merciful manner, he conducts his whole providential work, but chiefly that of redemption through the blood of his Son. Happy are they who experimentally know the joyful sound of the gospel, proclaiming Jesus' victories over sin, Satan, the world, death, and hell; and pardon, peace, liberty, and eternal happiness through his blood to sinful men. They walk in the light of JEHOVAH'S favour, direction, and joys! And gloriously are they justified, saved, strengthened, and honoured in Christ!—In these declarations of God to Samuel concerning David, let me contemplate how JEHOVAH found out and laid our help, our salvation, upon Jesus Christ. He it was that supported, strengthened, attended, honoured, and owned him. He it is that aids, favours, corrects, but blesses all believers. —Behold too the sufferings of Jesus and his church, from Satan, from Jews, from heathens, from the wicked: and how terrible the Almighty's displeasure! To be under it for ever constitutes hell. How short, how uncertain, are our days on earth! If through Jesus, as our risen life and quickening Head, we do not live to God's glory here, and with God in glory hereafter, our life is worse than in vain. But painful is it for exercised souls to want the sense of God's love, even though it be secured in the gracious promise. And grievous are the virulent reproaches of Christ, his Father, and his people, and hard to be borne by a tender saint.

PSALM XC. Title. This is one of the most remarkable, and, in some respects, one of the most beautiful, psalms in the whole book. It has been called the funeral hymn of the world. Human frailty is brought out in it with equal vividness and pathos; but it is brought out in such a way that it teaches man humble resignation rather than blank despair. It teaches the thoughtful man to utter in faith and hope the sublime prayer, 'Thy will be done,' for it shows him that God's will is the supreme good of the creature. It is called in the title a prayer of Moses; and Prof. Alexander has well said:—'The correctness of the title is confirmed by its unique simplicity and grandeur; its appropriateness to his times and circumstances; its resemblance to the law in urging the connection between sin and death; its simplicity of diction akin to the poetical parts of the Pentateuch, without the slightest trace of imitation or quotation; its marked unlikeness to the psalms of David, and still more to those of later date; and finally the proved impossibility of assigning it to any other age or author.' P.

Ver. 1. In all generations. In the days of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the slavery of Egypt, in the wanderings of the desert, in the wars with Philistia, &c., and even in the captivity and dispersion. Yea, still he is the refuge of his people, whenever their heart shall turn to the Lord. C.

Ver. 3. Return, ye children of men. That is, as some understand it, 'return to the dust from whence ye were taken.' But is it not more natural to understand the word return of the 'return of the spirit to God who gave it;' or of the resurrection, in which the body of his children, though 'sown in dishonour, is raised in glory?' C.

Ver. 11. Power of thine anger. None, in this life, can fully estimate the awful torment of 'the worm that dieth not, and the fire that is not quenched.'—'Yet who regardeth the power of thine anger, or thy wrath with reverence becoming thee?' (Boothroyd). C.

Ver. 16. Thy work of creation—thy work of providence—thy work of grace. Of the first, the natural man seeth but little: of the second, less; of the third, nothing; for, spiritual things must be spiritually discerned; and the 'pure in heart,' those renewed by the Holy Spirit, 'shall (alone) see God.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who, amidst a transitory and perishing world, have the eternal God for their ALL IN ALL. Wise is his dominion over mankind and unsearchable his duration. But weak and short-lived are men. And it is madness to seek satisfaction and happiness in things so fleeting and unsubstantial. With what armies of sorrows hath sin invaded and overspread our earth: and how exactly every crime is observed by God, in order to correct or punish on account of it! But it is unavailing to live, or live long, unless we live to and in Christ. Yea, intolerable is the woe which God has reserved for those who die in their sins. Every day, therefore, ought to be so numbered as to flee from them to Jesus Christ our refuge. The great business of life is to make ready for death. To ponder aright what is to become of us in eternity is wisdom indeed, and deserves the most serious application. Gracious souls cannot without sorrow abide the sense of God's displeasure. And they who have truly tasted the bitterness of sin cannot rest till the Lord return in pardoning mercy, speak peace to STATIONS OF THE CROSS IN THE GARDEN. [Psalms, lxxxix:45.]—"The days of his youth hast thou shortened: thou hast covered him with shame." The Greek church, or the Eastern church, has placed within the Garden of Gethsemane little stations which represent the incidents of the crucifixion. Poor pilgrims from all parts of the world upon visiting Jerusalem make the rounds of these stations of the Cross, praying at each. One cannot stand in the Garden of Gethsemane during the Greek Easter week without having a new apprehension of the hold the Lord Jesus Christ has upon the hearts of the human race. To see people kissing the wood of which the stations representing the incidents of the crucifixion are built; to see them kissing the rocks made dear to their hearts because lying upon the ground over which the Lord Jesus Christ walked, is sufficient to bring tears to the eyes of the hardest heart.

11 Who[r] knoweth the power of thine anger? even according to thy fear, so is thy wrath.[2]

12 So[s] teach us to number our days, that we may apply[3] our hearts unto wisdom.

13 Return,[t] O LORD, how long? and let it repent thee concerning thy servants.[4]

14 O[u] satisfy us early with thy mercy; that we may rejoice and be glad all our days.

15 Make us glad according to the days wherein thou hast afflicted us, and the years wherein we have seen evil.

16 Let[v] thy work appear unto thy servants, and thy glory unto their children.

17 And[x] let the beauty of the LORD our God be upon us: and [y]establish thou the work of our hands upon us; yea, the work of our hands establish thou it.[5]

1 The state of the godly. 3 Their safety. 9 Their habitation. 11 Their servants. 14 Their friend; with the effects of them all.

HE that[a] dwelleth in the secret place of the most High shall abide[1] under the shadow of the Almighty.[2]

2 I will say of the LORD, [b]He is my refuge and my fortress: [c]my God; in him will I trust.

3 Surely[d] he shall deliver thee from the snare of the fowler, and from the noisome pestilence.

4 He[e] shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust: his truth shall be thy [g]shield and buckler.

5 Thou[h] shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day;

6 Nor for [i]the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day.

7 A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it [j]shall not come nigh thee.

8 Only[k] with thine eyes shalt thou behold, and see the reward of the wicked.

9 Because [l]thou hast made the LORD which is my refuge, even the most High, thy habitation;

PSALM XCII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God, 4 for his great works, 6 for his judgments on the wicked, 10 and for his goodness to the godly.

A psalm or song for the sabbath-day.

IT is[a] a good thing to give thanks unto the LORD, and to sing praises unto thy name, O most High:

2 To[b] show forth thy loving-kindness in the morning, and thy faithfulness every night,[1]

3 Upon[c] an instrument of ten strings, and upon the psaltery; [2]upon the harp with a solemn sound.[3]

4 For thou, LORD, [d]hast made me glad through thy work:[4] I will triumph in the works of thy hands.

5 O LORD, [e]how great are thy works! and thy thoughts are very deep.

6 A[g] brutish man knoweth not; neither doth a fool [h]understand this.

7 When[i] the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish; it is that they shall be [j]destroyed for ever:

8 But thou, LORD, art [k]most high for evermore.

9 For, lo, thine enemies, O LORD, for, lo, [l]thine enemies shall perish; all the workers of iniquity shall be scattered.

their conscience, and enable them to rejoice in himself. And such as are faithful to Christ will be greatly concerned that he may work all in them, do all for them, give all to them; and that he may herein be glorified, not only in them, but also in their posterity after them.

PSALM XCI. Ver. 1. Secret place. In the bosom of the Father, where the Son was in glory 'before the foundation of the world'—our only conception of eternity (see Jn. 1. 18; and 17. 5; 1 Jn. 1. 2); for he that was before creation was, must have been eternal. C.

Ver. 2. I will say. That the speaker is Christ, his own tacit acknowledgment (Mat. 4. 6, compared with ver. 11, 12) undeniably demonstrates. The amended translation of Lowth, instead of 'I will say,' gives 'who saith,' which seems more natural. C.

Ver. 4. The wings and feathers which God adopted in the emblematic cherubim that overshadowed the mercy-seat—which, again, was the emblem of Jesus, the propitiation or mercy-seat for our sins. C.

Ver. 9. The Lord which is my refuge. By supplying the words which is, the sense is obscured. 'The Lord my refuge,' like 'the Lord our righteousness,' should be taken as a title of Jehovah, appropriating the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, as his refuge: and, through him, the refuge of every believer in his name. C.

Ver. 11. Satan quoted this text correctly, so far as he went; and, so far, our Lord acknowledged the interpretation. But yet he quoted falsely, because he quoted imperfectly, and misrepresented the truth, as he suppressed an essential part. And so, in all ages, have all his servants dealt. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I here contemplate Jesus Christ as the Father's Son, protecting, guarded, attended, heard in his prayers, honoured, and crowned with life and glory everlasting, let me with wonder behold the happiness of all people who make God their refuge and delightful habitation, who know his name, set their love on him, and call on him. Secured against every disappointment and danger, distinguished in the providence of God, guarded by angels, delivered from and victorious over the devil, that fowler, dragon, and lion of hell, JEHOVAH attends them in their troubles, hears their prayers, and gives them answers of peace. He exalts them on Christ their Rock, and makes them to sit with him on his throne; honours them with the relations of children, kings, and priests unto God, and decks them with blessed righteousness and imparted grace. And after preserving all who believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, he bestows upon them his unutterable blessedness above. May these things in Christ be the desire of my heart.

PSALM XCII. Ver. 3. Of the several musical instruments here enumerated, there is little, if any, certain knowledge. Nor is their specific nature important; as the object of the speaker is merely to show, that all instruments of music should be dedicated to the praise of God—to show forth his 'loving-kindness' in 'the morning,' because he has preserved his children while they slept—and his 'faithfulness every night,' because he has given them 'bread' through the day. C.

Ver. 12. Like the palm-tree—lofty and fruitful. Like the cedar—great and incorruptible. These characters meet in one, but are from him transfused to many. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Whatever our engagements be, we are bound at least to begin and end every day with prayer and praise. And they who have lively experience of God's love and faithfulness, will delight in daily showing forth his salvation. None but such as are ignorant or wicked will disregard his work of creation or providence; and much less that of redemption—but short-lived is the flourishing of wicked men, and dreadful the misery in which it issues; and yet this misery is the legitimate outcome of sin against God! But pleasant and profitable to themselves and others, and honourable to God, shall be the spiritual growth of those who are planted in Christ, and live in continued fellowship with him.

PSALM XCIII. Ver. 1. The Lord reigneth. The prophetic period to which this and some parallel psalms refer can be easily ascertained from comparing them with Re. 11. 17; 19. 6: at which time God shall 'take to him his mighty power and reign,' and when all the things that are now temporary and movable shall pass under that 'kingdom that cannot be moved,' He. 12. 28. C.

REFLECTIONS. Solid and believing views of Jesus Christ are excellent means to subdue the pride and remove the fear of man. They who have him for their king and keeper have no reason to be moved from their steadfastness. No earthly dishonours need disquiet those who have Christ, the Lord of all, to be their Father and portion. No troubles need dismay those who are by grace made one with the King eternal. No changes need discontent them who have God's sure testimonies for their heritage and the ground of their hope. None need be ashamed of holiness, which is the ornament of God's nature, of his renewed hearts, his church, and his heaven.

PSALM XCIV. Ver. 1. The infliction of punishment is essential to the character of justice in God, both as a corrective of the wicked, and a warning to the godly. It is in vain, then, for foolish men to quarrel with this appeal to him who hath said —'Dearly beloved, avenge not yourselves;' but, at the same time, has added—'Vengeance is mine,—I will repay, saith the Lord.' C.

Ver. 6. Every period of the persecutions of the Christian church has fully and literally realized this description. But such, alas! is unrenewed human nature, ever prone, in its fatal selfishness, to assail the defenceless, and, in its blinded ignorance, to conclude that God will neither see, regard, nor requite! C.

Ver. 15. Judgment shall return unto righteousness. That is, the judgment of God which the Jews imprecated, and which now has left them to harden in their sins, will return and lead them through their afflictions, to the righteousness of faith, when they shall look upon him whom they pierced, and follow on to know the Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Saints must always expect manifold injuries and oppressions in this world. But never must they usurp God's prerogative in avenging themselves, but patiently endure and wait for the day when he that judges righteously shall arise to judge their adversaries. When men leaving God are left to themselves, how their heart, hands, and tongue concur in abusing him and his people! Astonishing is their atheism and stupidity! They sink even below common sense. But God makes the correction of his people to issue in their instruction, and in their spiritual or eternal rest and safety, while hardened sinners are ruined. In due time he will rectify all seeming disorders; and the righteousness of his judgments shall be made clearly manifest to the encouragement of the upright to follow him, and to praise him for his providences. And thrice happy are they who have treasured up manifold experiences of God's support, comfort, and deliverance in their times of extreme distress! It will encourage them to expect the proper, seasonable, and righteous overthrow of opposition to the church, whether wicked courts in Israel, Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syro-Grecians, obstinate Jews, Romish heathens, antichristians, or others.

PSALM XCV. Ver. 1. Let us sing. The church here exhorts all her members to praise God by united singing— a depart-

3 Declare[c] his glory among the heathen, his wonders among all people.

4 For[d] the LORD is great, and greatly to be praised: he is to be feared above all gods.

5 For [e]all the gods of the nations are idols: but the LORD made the heavens.

6 Honour[g] and majesty are before him; strength and beauty are in his sanctuary.

7 Give[h] unto the LORD, O ye kindreds of the people, give unto the LORD glory and strength.

8 Give[i] unto the LORD the glory due unto his name:[2] bring[j] an offering, and come into his courts.

9 O worship the LORD in the beauty of holiness;[3] fear before him, all the earth.

10 Say among the heathen that [k]the LORD reigneth:[4] the [l]world also shall be established that it shall not be moved:[5] he [n]shall judge the people righteously.

11 Let[o] the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof.

12 Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice ment of worship by many churches sadly neglected, or most imperfectly attempted—and a duty and privilege to which many professing Christians consider themselves in no wise obligated. In addition, however, to this, and similar calls of the Spirit, the example of Christ on earth, and of saints in heaven, demands the universal voice of the church to engage in the praises of Jehovah. C.

Ver. 3. The heathen worshipped false gods; the Jews also were addicted to idolatry. One great object of this noble song of praise is to celebrate the praises of the one only exalted God of heaven and earth. He is called by his peculiar and incommunicable name JEHOVAH. By it he made himself known to Moses and the whole Jewish nation. By it he was distinguished from all false deities. Hence in this verse the psalmist says:—'For JEHOVAH is a great God, and a great King over all gods.' P.

REFLECTIONS.—God richly deserves our highest and most cordial praise. And we should invite one another to this blessed employ. How great is he, possessed of every necessary, infinite, and eternal excellency! How glorious his formation of all things, and his extensive dominion over them! How delightful and effective of blessings unnumbered is his new-covenant relation to men!—But if he be our Saviour and King, it is proper, it is necessary, that we be obedient subjects. To none but such is he the author of eternal salvation. To-day, without a moment's delay, we ought to hear his voice in the gospel, and to receive the offers of his grace. However slightly men pass over their sins, they are highly provoking in God's sight. And disbelief of his promises is one of the greatest insults that we can put upon him. That heart is hardened indeed whom the great and precious promises of the gospel cannot effect. Let us take warning by the ruin of others, that we fall not after the same example of unbelief. Though God bear long with us, he will not bear always. The mercies which we have received from him, as well as the wilfulness of our ignorance and our love to our errors, will fearfully aggravate our sin. And dreadful will be our case, if because of our sins he once exclude us from his new kingdom, his celestial rest, on account of our despising it when offered to us in the gospel.

PSALM XCVI. REFLECTIONS.—Since to us Gentiles Jesus Christ and his word of salvation are now come, let us, in songs ever fresh, ever cordial, publish the glories of his grace, and the wonders of his redeeming mercy, power, holiness, and majesty. Let us acknowledge him as our saving Lord, present ourselves to him as living sacrifices, and in the pure ordinances of his grace worship him with pure hearts and in a reverent and holy manner. Let us rejoice that his kingdom has been, is, and will be established among the Gentiles on earth. Let us, with joy, hope for these latter days, in which Satan shall be bound, and all the kingdoms on earth subjected to the righteous and merciful government of our Redeemer. And let us, with more exalted joy, expect his coming in the clouds, with power and great glory, to judge, and finally decide the eternal state of men and angels.

PSALM XCVII. Ver. 2. Clouds and darkness are the emblems of both his government of providence and plan of redemption, which are yet veiled from our eyes—in some parts by clouds, through which we see obscurely; and in others by darkness, through which we cannot see at all. C.

Ver. 7. Confounded. This is not any angry imprecation, but a humble prayer that God would confound the counsels of idolaters against truth and godliness, as he confounded the counsel of Ahithophel against David—that he would confound their combinations to do evil in the world, as he confounded the tongues of the Babel conspirators, and scattered them abroad upon the face of the whole earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—However mysterious and unsearchable God's providences be, they are always just and equal. A great shaking of the nations, by the Roman and other conquests, ushered in the gospel kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. A great destruction of obstinate Jews and heathens, and overturning of idolatry in the world, attended the erection and spread of it. And a great overturning of antichristians, Mahometans, and all their false worship, shall yet take place in its most glorious period. No exalted potentates, no mighty nations, nor fixed customs of wickedness, shall be able to withstand his conquering influence. Let saints then rejoice in his dignity of person, office, and state; in his gracious preservation and deliverance of his people; in the comforts and glory which he has prepared for them; and in his righteous judgments upon their implacable foes. And let their delight in his holiness inflame their love to himself and their hatred of sin.

PSALM XCVIII. Ver. 3. Ends—countries of the world, evidently carrying forward to the period foretold by our Lord, Mat. 24. 14. C.

Ver. 6. See note on Ps. 92. 3. But these instruments are now, almost without exception, dedicated to military pomp, theatrical spectacles, bacchanalian revellings, and worldly amusements; and, married to a sensual and degrading poetry, whereby they become the great auxiliaries of the world against God—and are by many held inconsistent with the simplicity and purity of Christian worship. C.

REFLECTIONS.—While I review these lofty notes,

PRISON, NAPLES. [Psalms, xcvi:10.]—"Say among the heathen that the Lord reigneth; the world also shall be established that it shall not be moved; he shall judge the people righteously." Perhaps there is no city on earth that furnishes a better point for the study of the judgments of God upon cities, nations, and individuals, than Naples. In no other city that has ever existed, have men gone further in defiance of the laws of God and man, and in no other city have they suffered more. Here, in the time of Rome's power and glory, her wealthy people reveled in vices too horrible to mention. And here the judgments of heaven have fallen with a fury and an emphasis almost without parallel. This region, so amply favored as one might be led to suppose it dropped from heaven, as the poet says, has done more to insult heaven than almost any other spot. But Naples has been judged, and here the Lord reigns, either to build those who obey or to destroy those who violate His law.

images, that boast themselves of idols: worship him, all ye [5]gods.[6]

8 Zion[t] heard, and was glad; and the daughters of Judah rejoiced because of thy judgments, O LORD.

9 For[m] thou, LORD, art high above all the earth; thou art exalted far above all gods.[7]

10 Ye that love the LORD, [o]hate evil: [p]he preserveth the souls of his saints; he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked.

11 Light[q] is sown[8] for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart.

12 Rejoice[r] in the LORD, ye righteous; and give thanks at the remembrance[9] of his holiness.

PSALM XCVIII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the Jews, 4 the Gentiles, 7 and all the creatures to praise God.

A psalm.

O SING[a] unto the LORD a new song;[1] for he hath done marvellous things: [b]his right hand and his holy arm hath gotten him the victory.

2 The[c] LORD hath made known his salvation: his righteousness hath he openly showed[2] in the sight of the heathen.

3 He[d] hath remembered his mercy and his truth toward the house of Israel: [e]all the ends of the earth have seen the salvation of our God.[3]

4 Make[g] a joyful noise unto the LORD, all the earth: make a loud noise, and rejoice, and sing praise.

5 Sing[h] unto the LORD with the harp; with the harp, and the voice of a psalm.

6 With trumpets and sound of cornet make a joyful noise before the LORD, the King.

7 Let[i] the sea roar, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein.

8 Let the floods clap their hands; let the hills be joyful together

9 Before[j] the LORD; for he cometh to judge the earth: with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity.

PSALM XCIX.

1 The prophet, setting forth the kingdom of God in Zion, 5 exhorteth all, by the example of their forefathers, to worship God at his holy hill.

THE LORD [a]reigneth; let the people tremble: [b]he sitteth between the cherubims; let the earth be moved.[1]

2 The[c] LORD is great in Zion; [d]and he is high above all people.[2]

3 Let them praise thy [e]great and terrible name; for it is [g]holy.

5 Angels, He.1.6.

6 More literally: 'Let all those that serve graven images, that make boast of their idols, be ashamed.—Worship him all ye elohim.' Elohim is one of the names given in Scripture to God. It signifies power; and the same word was applied to all those who exercised, or were supposed to possess power, such as angels, magistrates, princes, and false deities. That the word is intended in this place to signify 'angels' is proved by the quotation of the apostle in He.1.6.—P.

3 This psalm was, in all probability, composed to celebrate the dedication of the second temple. It was thus emphatically 'a new song'—a song in which the grateful nation expressed anew praise & thanks to Jehovah for restoring them to their fatherland, and giving them another temple. All nations had witnessed their humiliation and captivity; and now again all nations could see how JEHOVAH brought salvation to his people.—P.

let me think what is JEHOVAH! What is Jesus to my heart! What of his marvellous incarnation, miracles, life, death, resurrection, and ascension; of his love to sinners; and of his gifts of pardon, grace, and glory; have I seen! What of his victories over sin, Satan, the world, and death; and of his righteousness and salvation manifested in the gospel; have I known, believed, and embraced! What of his mercy and truth, in fulfilling his promises, have I experienced! What of his coming in power to gather the world to himself, and of his coming in glory to judge the world, do I know, believe, and rejoice in hope of!

PSALM XCIX. Ver. 1. The Lord reigneth. See note on Ps. 93.1. 'The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice,' Ps. 97. 1. 'The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble,' Ps. 99. 1.—Why this contrariety? Because Ps. xcvii. addressed a people that loved the Lord (ver. 10), a people made righteous by faith in a Saviour; but Ps. xcix. addresses a people who had 'sought out many inventions,' ver. 8, upon which, even a God of mercy takes, for the correction and ensample of others, severe and righteous judgment. C.

Ver. 8. Inventions. The calling for, contributing to, forming, setting up, and worshipping of the golden calf, and other such acts, in which their hearts seemed inexhaustibly prolific. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Terrible is Jesus' royal power and dominion to unbelievers; but comfortable and kindly awing to his saints. And in mercy, wisdom, and righteousness he executes his office. God honours and holds intimate fellowship with those who are remarkably given to prayer: and effectual are their intercessions for the preservation of nations and churches.

PSALM CII.

1 The prophet in his prayer maketh a grievous complaint. 12 He taketh comfort in the eternity and mercy of God. 18 The mercies of God are worthy to be recorded. 23 The prophet, sensible of his own weakness, resteth his hope on the unchangeable nature of God.

4 My[g] heart is smitten, and withered like grass; so that I forget to eat my bread.

5 By[h] reason of the voice of my groaning my bones cleave to my skin.[4]

6 I[i] am like a pelican of the wilderness: I am like an owl of the desert.

7 I[j] watch, and am as a sparrow alone upon the house-top.

8 Mine[k] enemies reproach me all the day; and they that are [l]mad against me are sworn against me.

9 For[m] I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled[n] my drink with weeping,[5]

10 Because[p] of thine indignation and thy wrath: for thou [q]hast lifted me up, and cast me down.

18 This[b] shall be written for the generation to come: and [c]the people which shall be created shall praise the LORD.[8]

19 For[d] he hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the LORD behold the earth;

20 To[e] hear the groaning of the prisoner; to loose those that are appointed to death;[9]

21 To[g] declare the name of the LORD in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem:

22 When[h] the people are gathered together, and the kingdoms, to serve the LORD.

23 He weakened[1] my strength in the way; he shortened my days.

24 I[i] said, O my God, take me not away in the midst of my days: [j]thy years are throughout all generations.

25 Of[k] old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the work of thy hands.

26 They[l] shall perish, but thou shalt [2]endure; yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment: as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed:

27 But[n] thou art the same, and thy years shall have no end.

28 The[o] children of thy servants shall continue, and their seed shall be established before thee.

But he will make the dearest of them to smart severely for their sin in this life, notwithstanding they may triumph through faith. Great praise is due to God for his mercies. And deep awe and inward purity are necessary in worshipping him that is infinitely holy.

PSALM C. Ver. 1. That this summons is not confined to 'the land of Judea' is obvious from ver. 4, in which the parties called are exhorted to enter Jehovah's courts. For, whereas the temple had within the gates an outward court, into which the Gentiles might freely enter—the converted Gentiles must here be united as 'God's sheep and people' with the believing Jews. See Jn. 10. 16; Is. 19. 25. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What joyful praise, what grateful thanksgiving, what cheerful and hearty service do we Gentiles owe to the Lord!—to him who is JEHOVAH, the infinite ALL!—to him who forms us both in nature and in grace!—to him who is our high proprietor and redeemer, our kind shepherd, leader, provider, and provision!—to him who is good in himself, and whose mercy and truth are for ever exerted in the fulfilment of gracious and ever-blessed promises to sinful men!

PSALM CI. Ver. 2. In a perfect way . . . with a perfect heart. Surely he that so resolves, if he do it not in self-ignorance, as Peter resolved never to forsake his Master, must be the Christ. C.——This is a noble resolution, well worthy of 'the man after God's own heart.' Wisdom, divine wisdom, should guide him in everything. His principles and motives would be wise; his conduct and acts in all the relations of life, private as well as public, would be regulated by wisdom; his words and his very thoughts would be wise; his companions and friends would be selected wisely. In the verses which follow, the psalmist shows how he was resolved to carry out his noble resolution. What a lesson does this psalm teach us! P.

REFLECTIONS.—The lot of saints on earth is a strange mixture of mercies and judgments. But all of them, taken in their connection and tendency, are to be improved as matter of praise and thanksgiving. Fellowship with and influences from God must strengthen and animate us to every holy practice. Serious godliness is the most substantial wisdom; and to act for God in the religious management of families, kingdoms, or in other relative stations, is a noted branch of it. With the utmost care ought men, by whatever power they have, to discourage everything wicked, and to encourage everything virtuous and holy. But it is in vain to attempt instructing or reforming others if we do not set them an example in our own practice.

PSALM CII. Ver. 6, 7. What three birds are specifically intended it is impossible with certainty to say; two of them are, however, inhabitants of the deserts, far from the haunts of men; and one, though the inhabitant of cities, a solitary watcher on house-tops. The different habits of these birds formed admirable emblems of that solitary state into which our Lord was often forced in order to elude the watchful and incessant malice of his enemies. C.

Ver. 12. This address exactly corresponds with its continuation in ver. 25; and as there is apostolic authority for considering ver. 25 to be words of the Father to the Son, there can be no doubt that ver. 12 is the address of the Father likewise. C.

Ver. 13. Would not history rather prove that the time to punish Zion had come at the period of our Lord's prayer of distress? Not so. 'Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' And though her salvation seem to linger in the eye of sense, it was then secured to the heart of faith; and all that now grows in the field of promise, shall be reaped in the harvest of vision. C.

Ver. 23. In this, and the first clause of ver. 24, the Son, in the days of his flesh, resumes his address to the Father. The reply of the Father, as quoted by the apostle, He. 1. 10, is one amongst the many and overwhelming evidences of the Godhead of the Son. In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth, Ge. 1. 1. But the Father being witness, the Son created the heavens and the earth; therefore—hear it, ye gainsayers, and be silent for ever!—therefore the Son is God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—To what low condition God reduces his church and people for the exercise and trial of their grace, and for exciting their more importunate prayers. In darkness, vexation, and trouble, their days often post toward an end. Afflicted, dispirited, and pained in their heart, and their body wasted to skin and bones, like owls and pelicans, they shun converse and comfort, and pine away in melancholy solitude. Often, like lonely sparrows, they are debarred from rest and sleep, and are deserted by friends, or avoid their company: are exposed to the reproach and fury of inveterate enemies—oppressed with grief—overwhelmed with a sense of God's indignation, in his sudden and awful changing of their comforts into depths of misery, till near the grave, and apparently near the pit! But great is the mercy that they have, notwithstanding, a God, a hearer of prayer, to whom they may complain; and a heart to pour out before him. Be the afflictions of the righteous as numerous as they will, the eternal Saviour has, and does, and will deliver them out of

PSALM CIII.

1 An exhortation to bless God for his mercy, 15 and for the constancy thereof.

A psalm of David.

BLESS the [a]LORD, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name.

2 Bless the LORD, O my soul, and [b]forget not all his benefits:

3 Who [c]forgiveth all thine iniquities;[1] who healeth[d] all thy diseases;

4 Who[e] redeemeth thy life from destruction; who[g] crowneth thee with loving-kindness and tender mercies;

5 Who[h] satisfieth thy mouth with good things; so that [i]thy youth is renewed like the eagle's.

6 The [j]LORD executeth righteousness and judgment for all that are oppressed.

7 He[k] made known his ways unto Moses, his acts unto the children of Israel.

8 The[l] LORD is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy.

9 He[n] will not always chide; neither will he keep his anger for ever.

10 He[o] hath not dealt with us after our sins; nor rewarded us according to our iniquities.

11 For as the heaven is high[2] above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that fear him.

12 As[p] far as the east is from the west, so far hath he removed our transgressions from us.

13 Like[q] as a father pitieth his children, so the LORD pitieth them that fear him.

14 For[r] he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust.

15 As[s] for man, his days are as grass; [t]as a flower of the field, so he flourisheth.

16 For[u] the wind passeth over it, and it is gone,[3] and the place thereof [v]shall know it no more.

17 But[x] the mercy of the LORD is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him, and [y]his righteousness unto children's children;

18 To [z]such as keep his covenant, and to those that remember his commandments to do them.

19 The[a] LORD hath prepared[4] his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all.

20 Bless[b] the LORD, ye his angels, that excel in strength,[5] that[c] do his commandments, hearkening unto the voice of his word.[6]

21 Bless ye the LORD, all ye [d]his hosts; ye ministers of his, that do his pleasure.

22 Bless[e] the LORD, all his works in all places of his dominion: bless the LORD, O my soul.[7]

PSALM CIV.

1 A meditation upon the mighty power, 7 and wonderful providence of God. 31 God's glory is eternal. 33 The prophet voweth perpetually to praise God.

BLESS the [a]LORD, O my soul. O LORD my God, [b]thou art very great; [c]thou art clothed with honour and majesty:

2 Who coverest thyself [d]with light as with a garment; [e]who stretchest out the heavens like a curtain;

3 Who[g] layeth the beams of his chambers in the waters; [h]who maketh the clouds his chariot; [i]who walketh upon the wings of the wind;

4 Who[j] maketh his angels spirits, his ministers a flaming fire;[1]

5 Who laid the foundations of the [2]earth, that it should not be removed for ever.

6 Thou[k] coveredst it with the deep as with a garment: the waters stood above the mountains.

7 At[l] thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away.

8 They go up[3] by the mountains; they go down by the valleys[4] unto the place which thou hast founded for them.

9 Thou[n] hast set a bound that they may not pass over; that they turn not again to cover the earth.

10 [o]He[5] sendeth the springs into the valleys, which run[6] among the hills.[7]

11 They[p] give drink to every beast of the field: the wild asses quench[8] their thirst.

12 By them shall the fowls of the heaven have their habitation, which sing[9] among the branches.

13 He[q] watereth the hills from his chambers;[1] the earth is satisfied with the fruit of thy works.[2]

14 He[r] causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man; that he may bring forth food out of the earth,

15 And [s]wine that maketh glad the heart of man, and oil to make his face to shine,[3] and [t]bread which strengtheneth man's heart.

16 The[u] trees of the LORD are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon, which he hath planted;

17 Where[v] the birds make their nests: as for the stork, [y]the fir-trees are her house.[4]

18 The[a] high hills are a refuge for the wild goats, and the rocks for [b]the conies.

19 He[c] appointed the moon for seasons; the sun knoweth his going down.

20 Thou[d] makest darkness, and it is night; them all. He has fixed the periods of his church's deliverance, and issued forth promises ascertaining the same. While with deep concern his servants are affected with her ruinous case, and pour forth their importunate prayers, he will flee to her relief, to the conversion of multitudes and the terror of obstinate opposers. What he did in former times, in delivering from Babylon, in erecting the New Testament church, and in destroying her Jewish and heathen persecutors, encourages us to hope for more glorious deliverances from Antichrist, and at last from the world that lieth in wickedness. And whatever distresses befall the faithful in their way to the heavenly mansions, Jesus' eternity secures the power and stability of his church, and of all who believe in Christ.

PSALM CIII. Ver. 2. Forget not all his benefits. A large portion of 'childhood and youth' are truly 'vanity,' are spent in much ignorance of God, and pass into forgetfulness of his mercies. He whose eye saw, and whose memory records, 'all the mercies' of Jehovah, can be no other than the all-perfect Son of God. C.

Ver. 5. Like the eagle's. This is no mere adoption of a popular opinion about the eagle's moulting in old age; nor any mere poetical ornament, which would be utterly inconsistent with simple and unchanging truth. Does not the entire difficulty arise from departing from the literal translation and natural position of the original? Literally translated and placed, the passage would read thus:—'shall be renewed (not as an eagle's, but) as an eagle, thy youth.' That is, thy youthful strength, Is. 40. 31, shall be renewed; and, as an eagle spurns the earth, soars above the clouds, and hides him in the sunbeams; so, on wings of heavenly devotion, thou shalt mount, and, while yet on earth, establish thy conversation in heaven. C.

Ver. 14. From ver. 10, the true 'children of Israel' make full acknowledgment of the preceding character of God, and especially in the total removal of their sins (ver. 12), effected by the blood of the Lamb. The east and west can never meet, no more can the justified believer again encounter his sins. The waters of mercy have passed over them, and their remembrance is gone for ever. C.

Ver. 17. Righteousness here signifies that just, good, and gracious way in which he deals with all those that are his true children. He deals justly with them in Christ their Saviour, counting them justified by his blood; he manifests his goodness to them in providing for all their wants, preserving them amid all dangers, wherein all the beasts of the forest do creep forth.[5]

21 The[g] young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God.

22 The [h]sun ariseth, they gather themselves together, and lay them down in their dens.

23 Man[i] goeth forth unto his work and to his labour until the evening.

24 O LORD, [j]how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all: the earth is full of [k]thy riches:

25 So is [l]this great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts.

26 There[m] go the ships:[6] there is that [o]leviathan, whom thou hast made[7] to play therein.

27 These[p] wait all upon thee; that thou mayest give them their meat in due season.

28 That thou givest them they gather: thou openest thine hand, they are filled with good.

29 Thou[q] hidest thy face, they are troubled: thou[r] takest away their breath, they die, and return to their dust.

30 Thou[s] sendest forth thy spirit, they are created: and thou [t]renewest the face of the earth.[8]

31 The[u] glory of the LORD shall endure[9] for ever; [v]the LORD shall rejoice in his works.

32 He[x] looketh on the earth, and it trembleth; he toucheth the hills, and they smoke.

33 I[y] will sing unto the LORD as long as I live; I will sing praise to my God while I have my being.[1]

34 My[z] meditation of him shall be sweet; I will be glad in the LORD.

35 Let[a] the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more.[2] Bless thou the LORD, O my soul. Praise ye the LORD.[3]

6 This was the grand lesson taught by all God's providential dealings with his people. It was taught in the life of Abraham, but especially in the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt. This was the teaching of history rather than of direct revelation.—P.

PSALM CV.

1 An exhortation to praise God, and to seek out his works. 8 His providence over Abraham, 16 over Joseph, 23 over Israel in Egypt, 26 over Moses delivering the Israelites, 37 over the Israelites brought out of Egypt, fed in the wilderness, and planted in Canaan.

O GIVE[a] thanks unto the LORD; call upon his name;[1] make [b]known his deeds among the people.

2 Sing[c] unto him, sing psalms unto him; talk ye of all his wondrous works.

3 Glory[d] ye in his holy name: [e]let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

4 Seek[g] the LORD, and his [2]strength;[3] seek his face evermore.

5 Remember[h] his marvellous works that he hath done; his wonders, and the judgments of his mouth,

6 O[i] ye seed of Abraham his servant, ye children of Jacob his chosen.

7 He[j] is the LORD our God:[4] his [k]judgments are in all the earth.

8 He[l] hath remembered his covenant for ever, the word which he commanded to a thousand generations:

9 Which[n] covenant he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac;

10 And confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel for an everlasting covenant;

11 Saying, [o]Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot[5] of your inheritance:

12 When they were but [p]a few men in number; yea, very few, and [q]strangers in it.

13 When[r] they went from one nation to another, from one kingdom to another people,

14 He[s] suffered no man to do them wrong; yea, he reproved kings for their sakes;

15 Saying, [t]Touch not mine anointed, and do my prophets no harm.[6]

enabling them to overcome all temptations; he deals graciously in showering down spiritual mercies, fulfilling to them promises, and cherishing them with bright and glorious hopes. P.

Ver. 18. Covenant. This is not that covenant of works which saith, 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things written in the book of the law, to do them;' but that covenant of grace, recorded by Paul, He. 8. 8–12, wherein the cleansing of the believer lies in the Redeemer's blood, 1 Jn. 1. 7, and his completeness and acceptance in the Redeemer's righteousness, Col. 2. 10; Ep. 1. 6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Our hearts need to be much encouraged and excited, even to the most proper and most delightful exercises. And in dealing with God our hearts ought to be wholly engaged. But how shameful is it that we ever forget, that we so early forget, his mercies!—his mercies so great, so necessary, so numerous, so connected, so everlasting!—his unbounded compassion to us who are so mean, so frail, so polluted!—his free, full, and everlasting pardons should humble our hearts, and animate us to holy fear, love, and obedience. And while all his creatures in heaven and earth concur to bless and serve him, surely we, above all, whom Christ hath redeemed by his blood, should never be silent, never be slothful!

PSALM CIV. Ver. 1. Thou art very great. The greatness of God in power can be estimated only by his works. Accordingly, the Spirit, by Christ, as the prophet of the church, here catalogues, as it were, and expounds some of the most remarkable and intelligible departments, whereby man may learn his own comparative weakness, nay, nothingness, and humble himself beneath the mighty power of God. C.

Ver. 5. Not removed for ever. This is not contradicted by what is declared, He. 1. 10–12; for, in point of fact, it is completely demonstrable by mathematical evidence, that the 'foundations of the earth, and of the whole planetary system, are calculated to abide for ever, unless he that laid them be pleased again to overturn them, and make all things new. Both these views are in strict accordance with the assertion in this verse. C.

Ver. 7. Voice of thy thunder. Modern discovery is daily bringing to light more of the power of electricity in the works of creation; and though we do not affirm with some that the Scriptures contain a system of natural philosophy, yet it is satisfactory to the believer who may live within the polluted atmosphere of infidelity, to learn that no progress of philosophical discovery has ever detected a single philosophical error in the Bible. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the glory, the awful majesty, the infinite goodness, and mercy of our God! In what bright abodes of light is he enthroned! While clouds and winds convey the influences of his power, angelic hosts, made by himself, surround his seat, and bear his messages. Established earth and bounded seas confess his power. Springs below, rains from above, fruitful fields, and towering trees, nestling birds, shining luminaries, changing seasons, ravenous animals, swarming fishes and their spacious sea, and labouring man, his Maker's image, all preserved, all maintained, all governed by his power, his kindness, and his care, owe their whole selves and service to this mighty Lord! Can he then, who hangs a whole creation on his arm, and feeds them at his board, overlook a ransomed child, or let him starve! While he with pleasure upholds all, governs all, and rejoices in all his works, let my soul, touched by his grace, meditate and praise: and while obstinate sinners turn away from him and find themselves ruined, let my hosannas and hallelujahs ascend to him that loved me and gave himself for me.

PSALM CV. Ver. 16. Human skill and industry are instruments of abundance; and to cultivate and exercise them, a bounden duty—yet abundance is not attainable, nor famine avoidable, by their utmost exertion; every comfort, every blessing, is of God that showeth mercy. C.

Ver. 44. It has been customary for infidels to charge this as an act of injustice against the God of Israel. But how little do they consider, that even a human superior is universally held entitled to remove a wicked and dishonest occupant, who refuses to render his stipulated return. How much more had God a right to drive out the most wicked of all nations, who not only refused to acknowledge their righteous Lord paramount, but who worshipped devils, while they hated him? C.

REFLECTIONS.—How infinitely excellent is this God, who deserves such gratitude, such praise, such search, such confidence! Marvellous is his blessed relation to us, and tender mercies towards us: and thrice happy are they who have him their own and their fathers' God! Happy are they who know the judgments of his mouth, his word, and live thereby; and for whose welfare the judgments of his hand are executed in all the earth! From mean appearances God's great manifestations of himself take their rise. But great is the care he takes of his people in this world, where they are but few, and strangers. He that touches them touches the apple of his eye. And apparent difficulties easily vanish before the power of a promising God. But how mysterious are his ways of providence! When things seem most against us, they are often strongly working for our good. Even calumnies and sufferings are made to try and prepare men for and advance them to honour. His church shall never want a friend in time of need. He can raise them up protectors where they least expect to find favour. And if God advance us, our duty is to discern his hand, and to adorn our station, by making it subservient to his glory. No danger or difficulty must deter us when his work is to be done.—All creatures concur in executing God's will of judgment or mercy. His protection, deliverance, and care of his people are wonderfully connected with the most fearful plagues and ruin of the wicked. And through trials innumbered, and of long continuance, God's 16 Moreover, he [u]called for [v]a famine upon the land: he brake the whole [z]staff of bread.

17 He[y] sent a man before them, even Joseph, who was sold for a servant;[7]

18 Whose[z] feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in iron;[8]

19 Until the time that his [a]word came: the word of the LORD tried him.

20 The[b] king sent and loosed him; even the ruler of the people, and let him go free.

21 He[c] made him lord of his house, and ruler of all his substance;[9]

22 To bind his princes at his pleasure, and teach his senators wisdom.

23 Israel[d] also came into Egypt, and Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham.[1]

24 And[e] he increased his people greatly, and made them stronger than their enemies.

25 He[g] turned their heart[2] to hate his people, to deal subtilely with his servants.

26 He[h] sent Moses his servant, and Aaron whom he had chosen.

27 They[i] showed his signs[3] among them, and wonders in the land of Ham.

28 He[j] sent darkness, and made it dark; and they[4] rebelled not against his word.[5]

29 He[k] turned their waters into blood, and slew their fish.

30 Their[l] land brought forth frogs in abundance in the chambers of their kings.

31 He[n] spake, and there came divers sorts of flies, and lice in all their coasts.

32 He[o] gave them hail for rain,[6] and flaming fire in their land.

33 He smote their vines also, and their fig-trees; and brake the trees of their coasts.

34 He[p] spake, and the locusts came, and caterpillars, and that without number,

35 And[q] did eat up all the herbs in their land, and devoured the fruit of their ground.

36 He[r] smote also all the first-born in their land, the chief of all their strength.

37 He[s] brought them forth[7] also with silver and gold: and there was not one feeble person among their tribes.[8]

38 Egypt[t] was glad when they departed: for the fear of them fell upon them.

39 He[u] spread a cloud for a covering; and fire to give light in the night.

40 The[v] people asked, and he brought quails, and satisfied them with the bread of heaven.

promises are at last perfectly accomplished in all who believe in Christ.

PSALM CVI. REFLECTIONS.—Wonderful and thank-worthy are all the deeds, the gracious deeds, of our God. Blessed are they who make his word their rule, and his compassion the ground of their acceptance, and the example of their holy practice! Happy are they who enjoy intimate fellowship with him in his saving works and benefits. But how horrid is sin, which seeks to trample him, and all his kindness, under foot! And awful is the reflection, that one generation should follow another in adding sin to sin. We need not upbraid the sinners who went before us, as we are involved in the same fearful crimes. Notwithstanding both mercies and judgments, how stupidly insensible, how strangely forgetful, how discontented with God's marvellous provision, how rebellious against his deputies and government—what distinguished idolaters, murmurers, infidels, adulterers, and how perversely disobedient—does sin make God's professed people! Often they proceed from evil to worse, till his indignation break forth against them without remedy. But great is the mercy, when sinful nations and churches have any among them who, by their prayers and their zeal, stand in the gap, and avert the Lord's indignation. With pleasure he looks upon such, and highly honours them on that account. But infinite is the goodness of our God, who, when provoked to add one stroke to another, and to make wicked tempters to sin cruel tormentors for it, is so ready to step in for our relief, and to rebuke, or even turn the hearts of them that destroyed us. Never is a penitent prayer poured out into his bosom but it returns in gracious preservation and deliverance. Let then all our troubles drive us to the throne of grace; and all our mercies, bestowed

17 The[u] earth opened and swallowed up
Dathan, and covered the company of Abiram.
18 And[v] a fire was kindled in their company;
the flame burnt up the wicked.
19 They[x] made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image.[9] 20 Thus[y] they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.
21 They[z] forgat God[1] their saviour, which had done [a]great things in Egypt;
22 Wondrous works in the land of Ham, and terrible things by the Red sea.
23 Therefore[b] he said that he would destroy them, had not Moses his chosen stood before him in the breach, to turn away his wrath, lest he should destroy them.
24 Yea, [c]they despised the pleasant land;[2]
they[d] believed not his word;
25 But[e] murmured in their tents, and harkened not unto the voice of the LORD:
26 Therefore he [g]lifted up his hand against them, to overthrow them in the wilderness:
27 To overthrow[3] their seed also among the nations, and to [h]scatter them in the lands.
28 They[i] joined themselves also unto Baal-
peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead.[4] 29 Thus [k]they provoked him to anger with their inventions; and the [l]plague brake in upon them.
30 Then[n] stood up Phinehas, and executed judgment; and so [o]the plague was stayed:
31 And that was [p]counted unto him for righteousness unto all generations for evermore.
32 They[q] angered him also at the waters of strife, so that it went ill with Moses for their sakes:
33 Because they provoked his spirit, so that

1 They forgat God. If the forgetfulness of spirit here charged upon Israel appear strange or incredible to any one, let him only look at the world around him, and in all ranks and conditions of men he will discover examples of a forgetfulness of baptism and the Lord's Supper, with all their holy obligations and privileges, not only as glaring as those of Israel in the desert, but many times more strange and criminal, because of the greater light of the knowledge of God which now shines in the face of Jesus Christ—of Christ, not in types and shadows, but visibly set forth as crucified amongst us.—C.

5 The Israelites sinned grievously in thus provoking Moses; but Moses himself was not, therefore, excused. This teaches an important lesson. Moses 'spake unadvisedly,' i.e. rashly and therefore sinfully. Moses ought to have borne patiently with his people. Instead of doing so he exclaimed passionately:—'Hear now, ye rebels, must we fetch you waters out of the rock?'—P.

1 Within a few past years, the Lord seems in mercy again to have turned the hearts of Christians toward the Jews, in pity for their sufferings, and efforts for their conversion. It is one of the signs of the times, both in and to the church. The Lord turn the hearts of men into this channel of mercy, till Jacob be delivered, and Israel again dwell safely!—C.

34 They[s] did not destroy the nations, [t]concerning whom the LORD commanded them;
35 But[u] were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works.
36 And[v] they served their idols; which were a snare unto them.
37 Yea,[x] they sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils,[6]
38 And shed innocent blood, even the blood of their sons and of their daughters, whom they sacrificed unto the idols of Canaan: and the land was [y]polluted with blood.
39 Thus[z] were they defiled with their own works, [a]and went a whoring with their own inventions:
40 Therefore [b]was the wrath of the LORD kindled against his people, insomuch that he abhorred his own inheritance.
41 And[c] he gave them into the hand of the heathen; and they that hated them ruled over them.
42 Their enemies also oppressed them, and they were brought into subjection under their hand.
43 Many[d] times did he deliver them: but they provoked him with their counsel, and were [7]brought low for their iniquity.[8]
44 Nevertheless[e] he regarded their affliction, [g]when he heard their cry:
45 And[h] he remembered for them his covenant, and [i]repented according to the multitude of his mercies.[9] 46 He[j] made them also to be pitied of all those that carried them captives.[1] or promised, encourage our prayers, and animate our praise.

PSALM CVII. Ver. 3. There is no characteristic mark by which the speaker can be identified; but from ver. 3, 16, compared with Is. 45. 2, it appears to have been written after the return from the Babylonish captivity. South, in the Hebrew, signifies sea, which evidently points to the Persian Gulf, lying south of Babylon. C.

Ver. 4. This cannot refer to the first wandering in the wilderness; for then the people were all gathered out of one land; on the return from Babylon, out of the many provinces of a vast empire. C.

Ver. 11. This verse develops most of the causes of national calamities; and whilst the wise men of the world are ascribing them to every cause but the true one, it traces them at once to rebellion against the words and contempt of the counsels of God. C.

Ver. 14. By comparing this verse with Mat. 4. 15, 16, where a similar description is applied to the rising of the light of Jesus, 'the Sun of Righteousness,' upon the earth, the psalm will be found, under natural emblems, to veil spiritual realities. C.

Ver. 24. Not even the earthquake is so terrible an example of the divine power, or emblem of the divine wrath, as the sea-storm; the earthquake soon passes over, and is generally confined to a few spots of an island or continent; but the sea-storm continues unabated or increasing for days, and rages over the vast expanse of an ocean, dispersing navies as the light foam upon its waves, and swallowing into its deep recesses the collected riches of distant lands. Yet this terrible storm is the Lord's voice to his children; and, when all other help is vain, 'they cry unto him, and he bringeth them out of their distresses.' Ah! Britain! Britain! remember the sailor boy! he is the trustee of all thy wealth, the right arm of all thy power. Instruct him when on land—save him from the misguidance of his own untutored simplicity; and follow him with thy prayers amid the perils of the great deep: so shall he return to bless thee in the calm of his 'desired haven.' C.

Ver. 33. Rivers. 'Well-watered ground.' That such terrible changes have frequently taken place, by the operation of natural causes, geological observation abundantly testifies. Moral causes also operating upon the peace, security, and industry of a country, have often produced similar effects. Both causes, however, are alike the judgments of God, intended to teach man his dependence, and humble him before his Maker. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold the effects of sin in forms unnumbered! in wanderings, in imprisonments, sickness, storms, barrenness, poverty, &c. Behold also the power of effectual fervent prayer!—it brings speedy relief in every case. The holiness and equity, the goodness, mercy, and tenderness of God, are connectedly displayed in his providence to men. With exact and humble care ought we then to consider the doing of the Lord, and to compare it with his word, and with our prayers, and one part of it with another; so shall we understand the loving-kindness of the Lord. And, were we accurate observers of providence, constantly would our heart, our lips, and life, be filled with the high praises of his kindness, and of his wonderful works towards the children of men.

PSALM CVIII. REFLECTIONS.—Quickly God can change the lot, can change the frames, and change the songs of his people; and put high praises in the room of bitter wailings. How confidently then may saints expect to see the salvation of God! What he has promised faith can rejoice in as if already performed: and whatever difficulties be in the way, nothing is too hard for the Lord. However strong their enemies, if they are true, they shall prove more than conquerors through him that loveth them.

PSALM CIX. Ver. 6. This is one of those psalms against which, like its subject, the wicked infidel, and the uninstructed believer, have unhappily concurred to 'open their mouth.' To evade the imaginary impropriety of its heavy curses, some have imagined ver. 6–17 to be uttered by David's enemies. But how come they, in so imagining, to overlook Ac. 1. 16–20, where Judas, and not David, is declared to be its prophetical object? C.

Ver. 8. To vindicate these curses, for they are literally such, will be easy, before those who read and believe, and tremble as they read, De. 27. 15–26, and who fully comprehending Ga. 3. 10, do acknowledge and feel that 'Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them.' C.

Ver. 14. Most probably the sin of early training Judas up to the love of money, pilfering, and malignant cursing, and, so far from repenting of this perverted education, or seeing its bitter fruits, only gnawing her spirit with grief at its want of a successful issue. C.

Ver. 22. Poor and needy. On comparing these epithets with Ps. 40. 17, and remembering that He. 10. 5 proves Ps. xl. to be descriptive of Christ, no doubt can reasonably remain that, in this, he is the speaker likewise. C.

Ver. 23. The shiftings and currents of the wind toss the dense swarms of locusts in a very extraordinary manner. Even so was our Lord tossed up and down—at one time borne over palm-leaves and garments, and hailed with loud hosannas!—at another followed with deepest execrations—Away with him; away with him! Crucify him; crucify him! C.

Ver. 30. The comparison of this verse with Ps. 18. 49 and Ro. 15. 9, affords another unquestionable parallel proof that he who speaks in the first person is Christ. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Dreadful must be the nature of sin, which makes men so desperate and outrageous enemies

PSALM CVII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the redeemed, in praising God, to observe his manifold providence, 4 over travellers, 10 over captives, 17 over sick men, 23 over seamen, 33 and in divers varieties of life.

O GIVE[a] thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.[1]

2 Let the [b]redeemed of the LORD say so, whom he hath redeemed from the hand of the enemy;

3 And [c]gathered them out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south.[2]

4 They[d] wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way; they found no city to dwell in.

5 Hungry[e] and thirsty, their soul fainted in them.[3]

6 Then[g] they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he delivered them out of their distresses.

7 And he [h]led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation.

8 Oh[i] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

9 For[j] he satisfieth the longing soul, and filleth the hungry soul with goodness.

10 Such[k] as sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death, being bound in affliction and iron;

11 Because[l] they rebelled against the words of God, and contemned the [n]counsel of the most High:

12 Therefore[o] he brought down their heart with labour: they fell down, and [p]there was none to help.

13 Then[q] they cried unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saved them out of their distresses.

14 He[r] brought them out of darkness and the shadow of death, and brake their bands in sunder.

15 Oh[s] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

16 For[t] he hath broken the gates of brass, and cut the bars of iron in sunder.

17 [u]Fools [v]because of their transgression, and because of their iniquities, are afflicted.

18 Their[x] soul abhorreth all manner of meat; and they draw near unto the gates of death.

19 Then[y] they cry unto the LORD in their trouble, and he saveth them out of their distresses.

20 He[z] sent his word, and healed[4] them, and delivered them from their destructions.

21 Oh[a] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

22 And[b] let them sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and declare his works with [5]rejoicing.

23 They[c] that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters;

24 These see [d]the works of the LORD, and his wonders in the deep

25 For[e] he commandeth, and [6]raiseth the stormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof.

26 They[g] mount up to the heaven, they go down again to the depths; [h]their soul is melted because of trouble.

27 They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wit's end.[7]

28 Then[i] they cry unto the LORD in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses.

29 He[j] maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still.

30 Then are they glad, because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired haven.

31 Oh[k] that men would praise the LORD for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men!

32 Let[l] them exalt him also in the congregation of the people, and praise him in the assembly of the elders.

33 He [n]turneth rivers into a wilderness, and the water-springs into dry ground;[8]

34 A fruitful land into barrenness,[9] for the wickedness of them that dwell therein.

35 He[o] turneth the wilderness into a standing water, and dry ground into water-springs:

36 And[p] there he maketh the hungry to dwell, that they may prepare a city for habitation;

37 And[q] sow the fields, and plant vineyards, which may yield fruits of increase.

38 He[r] blesseth them also, so that they are multiplied greatly, and suffereth not their cattle to decrease.

39 Again,[s] they are minished, and brought low through oppression, affliction, and sorrow.

40 He[t] poureth contempt upon princes,[1] and causeth them to wander in the [2]wilderness, where there is no way.

41 Yet[u] setteth he the poor on high [3]from affliction, and maketh him families like a [4]flock.

42 The[v] righteous shall see it, and rejoice; and all iniquity shall stop her mouth.

43 Whoso[x] is wise, and will observe these things, even they shall understand the lovingkindness of the LORD.[5]

1 This beautiful psalm was probably composed to celebrate the return of the Jewish exiles from Babylon, and designed to be sung at the dedication of the temple. It is antiphonal in construction—the chorus commencing with the stanza of general thanksgiving: — 'O give thanks unto Jehovah, for he is gracious, and his mercy endureth for ever!' Then the leader chants the special causes of thanksgiving; the chorus breaking in at intervals (see ver. 8, 15, 21, 31). Probably the concluding verse (43) may have been uttered by the high-priest, as a solemn exhortation to the whole people.—P.

PSALM CVIII.

B.C. cir. 1036.

1 My heart is fixed. Independent of the apostolic quotation (Ro. 15. 9), which determines the application, this very characteristic of a fixed heart would prove the speaker either to be a self-deceiver (see Je. 17. 9), or Christ. The former he cannot be—for the Spirit hath approved him; the latter he must be—for the Spirit hath so pointed him out to our discovery and confidence.—C.

to Christ and his people. But terrible, spreading, and extensive, lasting and yet most righteous, are the judgments which overtake them from heaven, from earth, and from hell! Deep marked was this truth on the enemies of David, on Judas the traitor, and his Jewish brethren, the murderers of our Lord and his saints; and on heathenish and popish Romans. But if men spitefully abuse us, let us give ourselves unto prayer. Though our God be long silent, he will

PSALM CIX.

1 David, complaining of his slanderous enemies, under the person of Judas, devoteth them. 16 He showeth their sin. 21 Complaining of his own misery, he prayeth for help. 30 He promiseth thankfulness.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

HOLD [a]not thy peace, O [b]God of my praise;
2 For[c] the mouth of the wicked, and the mouth of the deceitful,[1] are opened against me;[2] they[d] have spoken against me with a lying tongue.

3 They compassed me about also with words of hatred; and fought against me [e]without a cause.

4 For[g] my love they are my adversaries: [h]but I give myself unto prayer.[3]

5 And[i] they have rewarded me evil for good, and hatred for my love.

6 Set thou a wicked man over him; and let Satan[4] stand[j] at his right hand.[5]

7 When he shall be judged, let him be condemned;[6] and [k]let his prayer become sin.

8 Let[l] his days be few; and let another take his office.[7]

9 Let[n] his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow.

10 Let[o] his children be continually vagabonds, and beg; let them seek their bread also out of their desolate places.

* It ought not to be overlooked that the remaining portions of this psalm are prophetical rather than imprecatory; yet it is still quite true that the writer desires the punishment of those who had persecuted him with such intense bitterness. 'The first thing the psalmist asks is, that his foe might be subjected to the evil of having a man placed over him like himself—a man regardless of justice, truth, and right; a man who would respect character and propriety no more than he had himself done. It is in fact a prayer that he might be punished in the line of his offences. It cannot be wrong that a man should be treated as he treats others; and it cannot be in itself wrong to desire that a man should be treated according to his character and deserts; for this is the object of all law, and this is what all magistrates and legislators are endeavouring to secure.' There is much force in these words of Albert Barnes; yet still the spirit and real bearing of this psalm must be in a great measure lost if we lose sight of its prophetic character, and of the fact that it is the direct utterance of the divine and omniscient Spirit of God.—P.

11 Let[p] the extortioner catch all that he hath; and let the stranger spoil his labour.

12 Let there be none to extend mercy unto him; neither let there be any to favour his fatherless children.

13 Let[q] his posterity be cut off; and in the generation following let their name be blotted out.

14 Let[r] the iniquity of his fathers be remembered with the LORD; and let not the sin of his mother be blotted out.

15 Let[s] them be before the LORD continually, that he may [t]cut off the memory of them from the earth:

16 Because[u] that he remembered not to show mercy, but persecuted the poor and needy man, that he might even slay [v]the broken in heart.

17 As[x] he loved cursing, so let it come unto him; as he delighted not in blessing, so let it be far from him.

18 As he clothed himself with cursing like as with his garment, so let it come into his bowels[8] like water, and like oil into his bones.

19 Let[y] it be unto him as the garment which covereth him, and for a girdle wherewith he is girded continually.

20 Let[z] this be the reward of mine adversaries from the LORD, and of them that speak evil against my soul.

21 But[a] do thou for me,[9] O GOD the Lord, for thy name's sake: because thy mercy is good, deliver thou me.

22 For[b] I am poor and needy, and my heart is wounded within me.

23 I[c] am gone like the shadow when it declineth; I am [d]tossed up and down as the locust.

24 My [e]knees are weak through fasting; and my flesh faileth of fatness.

25 I[g] became also a reproach unto them: when they looked upon me they shaked their heads.

26 Help[h] me, O LORD my God: [i]O save me according to thy mercy:

27 That[j] they may know that this is thy hand; that thou, LORD, hast done it.

28 Let[k] them curse, but bless thou: when they arise, let them be ashamed; but let thy servant rejoice.

29 Let[l] mine adversaries be clothed with shame, and let them cover themselves with their own confusion, as with a mantle.

speak at the last. If he help, we need not regard who harass us. If he bless, we need not care who curse us. If all our hopes be placed on his boundless mercy and grace, no matter how we be loaded with poverty, wounds of spirit, decay of body, or revilings of men. He can quickly help and save us. The more shame we take to ourselves for our sins, we are in the less danger of suffering for them. And God's support and salvation shall quickly fill our mouths with high and everlasting praise.

PSALM CX. Ver. 1. The prophetic references in this psalm to the person, work, and kingdom of our Lord are placed beyond all doubt by the frequent quotations from it in the New Testament. Our Lord himself appropriates the words of the first verse, Mat. 22. 44; Mar. 12. 36; and Lu. 20. 42. They are so interpreted by Peter in Ac. 2. 34. In He. 5. 6, Paul applies the words of ver. 4 to Christ; so also in He. 7. 17–21. It is clear from these quotations that the Messianic interpretation of the psalm was universal among the Jews in ancient times. P.— The PSALM CX.

1 A prediction of the kingdom, 4 priesthood, 5 triumphs, 7 and sufferings of Christ.

A psalm of David.

THE LORD[a] said unto my Lord, Sit thou at my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool.

2 The LORD shall send [b]the rod of thy strength out of Zion: [c]rule thou in the midst of thine enemies.

3 Thy[d] people shall be willing in the day of thy power, [e]in the beauties of holiness from the womb of the morning:[1] thou hast [g]the dew of thy youth.[2]

4 The LORD [h]hath sworn, and will not repent, [i]Thou art a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek.

5 The[j] LORD at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath.

6 He shall judge among the heathen, he shall fill the places with the dead bodies; [k]he shall wound the heads over many[3] countries.

PSALM CXI.

1 The psalmist by his example inciteth others to praise God for his glorious and gracious works. 10 The fear of God is the source of true wisdom.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] I[a] will praise the LORD with my whole heart, in the assembly of the upright, and in the congregation.

2 The[b] works of the LORD are great, [c]sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.

3 His[d] work is honourable and glorious; and his[e] righteousness endureth for ever.

4 He[g] hath made his wonderful works to be remembered: [h]the LORD is gracious, and full of compassion.

5 He[i] hath given meat[2] unto them that fear him: he [j]will ever be mindful of his covenant.

6 He[k] hath showed his people the power of his works, that he may give them the heritage of the heathen.

7 The[l] works of his hands are verity and judgment; [m]all his commandments are sure.

8 They [3]stand fast[4] for ever and ever, and are done [o]in truth and uprightness.

9 He[p] sent redemption[5] unto his people; [q]he hath commanded his covenant for ever: [r]holy and reverend is his name.

10 The[s] fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom: [t]a good understanding[6] have all they that do his commandments:[7] his [u]praise endureth for ever.[8]

PSALM CXII.

1 Godliness hath the promises of this life, 4 and of the life to come. 10 The prosperity of the godly shall be despised by the wicked.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Blessed[a] is the man that feareth the LORD, that delighteth greatly in his commandments.

2 His[b] seed shall be mighty upon earth: the generation of the upright shall be blessed.

3 Wealth[c] and riches shall be in his house; [d]and his righteousness endureth for ever.

4 Unto[e] the upright there ariseth light in the darkness: [g]he is gracious, and full of compassion, and righteous.

5 A[h] good man showeth favour, and lendeth: he will guide his affairs with discretion.[2]

6 Surely[i] he shall not be moved for ever: [j]the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.

7 He[k] shall not be afraid of evil [3]tidings: [l]his heart is fixed, trusting in the LORD.

8 His heart is established, he shall not be afraid, until [n]he see his desire upon his enemies.

9 He[o] hath dispersed; he hath given to the poor; [p]his righteousness endureth for [4]ever; [q]his horn shall be exalted with honour.

10 The[r] wicked[5] shall see it, and be grieved; [s]he shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away: [t]the desire of the wicked shall perish.

speaker here is David, who in spirit calls Jesus LORD, and thereby enabled him, in the days of his flesh, to establish unanswerably his superiority to David, Mat. 22. 43. C.

Ver. 3. Willing. To hear, search, judge, believe, love, deny themselves, take up their cross, follow, suffer, pray, praise; yea, utterly to devote themselves, with all they have and are, to the advancement of the kingdom of their great Priest and King. C.

Ver. 5. The LORD at thy right hand. It is distinctly to be remarked, that he who is called Adon, Lord, ver. 1, is placed at the right hand of JEHOVAH, God supreme. But now, ver. 5, he is distinctly called Jehovah—a mode of speech clearly evincing the Godhead equality of Father and Son, with the office-subordination of the Son to the Father. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How high is the dignity of our Redeemer! Glorious is his reward for his work of obedience and suffering. And all his enemies—sin, Satan, the world, and death—are made to bow under his feet. The everlasting gospel, sent forth into all the world, becomes powerful to men's salvation, and his kingdom is established, in despite of all opposition. Multitudes of his enemies surrender in the day of his power, cheerfully enlist themselves in his service, and worship him in the beauties of holiness. In the morning of the gospel period, through the heavenly influence of the blessed Spirit, multitudes, fresh and flourishing in heart, surrendered themselves to this Lord. And upon the most solid ground are believers' hopes and comforts founded—the all-sufficiency of Jesus Christ, and the oath of the eternal JEHOVAH. With confidence then ought we always to expect pardon, peace, and all the blessings of salvation, from this great High-priest of our profession. Horrid is the crime, if for a moment we dare question his power and grace, and stagger at promises confirmed by two immutable things—the word and oath of that God who cannot lie. And while Jesus, finishing his obedience, and strengthened by the Holy Ghost, lifts up his head in everlasting triumph, dreadful is the ruin of his malicious and powerful opposers, Jews, heathens, antichristians, and others.

PSALM CXI. Ver. 1. On comparing this ver. with Ps. 18. 49, explained by Ro. 15. 9, there can be no question that both are the words of Christ. But were this proof wanting, the confident dedication of the whole heart, would prove the speaker to be either an ignorant self-deceiver (see Je. 17. 9), or Christ, who can neither deceive nor be deceived. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Praising of God ought to be hearty, candid, and avowed: and they who inculcate it upon others should carefully exemplify it in their own practice. How extensive are the grounds of it! A God infinitely gracious and faithful, ever mindful of his new relation, and every promise thereof; holy and reverend in nature and in name. His works are unsearchably glorious, memorable, powerful, just, and true; and all of them communicating provision and riches to them that fear him. Fixed, everlasting, true, and candid are all his counsels and words, exactly conformable to his righteous nature, and must be obeyed in simplicity by them that serve him. Everlasting, ordered in all things and sure, is his word, and all the redemption it offers and communicates to men. And they are the only wise persons who fear him and keep his commandments; everlasting shall be their honour and reward.

PSALM CXII. Ver. 3. Every torture of accommodation has been exhausted in applying this psalm to every believer, at least to every one of high attainments. But surely a comparison of this single verse with Ro. 3. 10, 21, 22, should have convinced every interpreter, that, though not altogether a prophecy, it was still a description, a spiritual picture of Messiah, whereby the church might recognize him at his coming. C.

Ver. 9. He hath dispersed. This is explained by what follows. It means he is liberal and benevolent. He scatters with a bountiful, and yet wise and prudent hand, whatever God commits to his stewardship. P.

REFLECTIONS.—What holy awe of God, delight in spiritual things, candour, kindness, and equity, are necessary in our obedience to God's law! And great profit, stability, honour, safety, quietness of mind, and victory over all our enemies, are secured for its reward. But how unhappy are the wicked, whose wishes shall be either cursed or denied: and to whom even the happiness of the godly is an insupportable vexation.

5 What[g] ailed thee, O thou sea, that thou fleddest? thou Jordan, that thou wast driven back?

6 Ye mountains, that ye skipped like rams; and ye little hills, like lambs?

7 Tremble,[h] thou earth, at the presence of the LORD, at the presence of the God of Jacob;

nity it will require for the redeemed servants of the Lord sufficiently to praise their high, their unparalleled, their condescending Redeemer, who, by his own debasement, raises faithful believers from the pit of corruption to the loftiest thrones of bliss; and now makes the Gentile world, after long barrenness, to bring forth millions of true converts to himself in his gospel church!

PSALM CXIV. REFLECTIONS.—In infinite tenderness God chooses all who accept Christ to be his peculiar people, and to be blessed with the Spirit's witness, and gracious influences. And nothing can detain his people in their spiritual bondage if they are faithful. Nothing, no not seas of tribulation, nor mountains of unbelief and corruption, can stop their passage to the heavenly Canaan. Nor while Jesus, our smitten Rock of ages, continues a fountain open, shall they want refreshment by the way. Tremble then, my carnal heart, at the presence of a God in Christ as my own. And let all my hardened powers be melted by his love.

PSALM CXV. Ver. 8. As really destitute of the use of eyes, &c., as the idols are of the possession of these organs. No man can have the use of his eyes who looks up to the heavens and attributes their formation to unintelligible and unintelligent chance, or a carved block of marble or wood. Indeed, did idolatry live merely in history, and were it not still an extensive and powerful system, it would be scarcely possible to conceive it ever had existed as described. But it lives, while Satan, its inventor, rules; and will not fall till his kingdom is overturned. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let us be always nothing in our own eyes, and let Christ be all and in all. To his grace every good thing in us, or done by us, must be ascribed. But disgracing to human nature, as well as

10 I[p] believed, therefore have I spoken: I was greatly afflicted;[5]

PSALM CXVIII.

1 An exhortation to praise God for his mercy. 5 The psalmist by his own experience showeth how good it is to trust in God. 19 Under the type of the psalmist the coming of Christ in his kingdom is expressed.

O GIVE [a]thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: [b]because his mercy endureth for ever.

2 Let[c] Israel now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

3 Let[d] the house of Aaron now say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

4 Let[e] them now that fear the LORD say, that his mercy endureth for ever.

5 I[g] called upon the LORD in distress:[1] the LORD answered me, and set me in a large place.

6 The[h] LORD is on my side;[2] I will not fear: what can man do unto me?

7 The[i] LORD taketh my part with them that help me; [j]therefore shall I see my desire upon them that hate me.

8 It[k] is better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in man.

9 It[l] is better to trust in the LORD than to put confidence in princes.

10 All[n] nations compassed me about: but in the name of the LORD will I destroy them.[3]

11 They compassed me about; yea, they compassed me about: but in the name of the LORD I will destroy them.

12 They[o] compassed me about like bees; they are quenched as the fire of thorns: for in the name of the LORD I will [4]destroy them.[5]

13 [p]Thou[6] hast thrust sore at me that I might fall; but the LORD helped me.

14 The[q] LORD is my strength and song, and is become my salvation.

dishonouring to God, is the worshipping of idols. And how absurd it is for idolaters to upbraid the saints with their all-present, all-creating, and all-governing JEHOVAH. Great is their encouragement to trust in a God, who is so much, and gives so much to his people; nay, gives so much to men! They can never fail whose faith stands firm. And greatly then should we exert ourselves in praising and serving God here, as in death we shall have no such opportunities for it.

PSALM CXVI. Ver. 3. Can this be true of any but the 'Man of Sorrows, acquainted with grief?'—of him who was exceeding 'sorrowful even unto death;' which death lies within the dominion of Satan, by whom its power is still vindictively exercised? See He. 2. 14. C.

Ver. 10. Were there yet any question that Jesus, in his sorrows, is the speaker, the quotation of this verse by Paul (2 Co. 4. 13) would put the matter beyond controversy. 'The same spirit of faith' spoken of, ver. 13, cannot possibly have a correspondent, but 'the life of Jesus,' referred to in ver. 11. C.

Ver. 11. In my haste. 'In my ecstasy.'—Sept. 'My agitation.'—Horsley. All men are liars—'are deceitful.'—Green. The very fact which our Lord, returning from his agony in Gethsemane, implied, 'when he came to his disciples, and found them asleep,' and said, 'What! could ye not watch with me one hour?' C.

Ver. 15. As the eye of man gazes with delight on a precious gem, so the most lovely, the most precious of all things in the sight of God, is the patient and triumphant death of his saints. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who love the Lord! They are every moment laid under fresh obligations to this delightful exercise. Prayers heard by God should always make us love him more, and praise him more. And if we are in Christ, our troubles may be very sore, but our victory and deliverance are sure and near. Delightful consolation and rest succeed the bitterest tribulations to his saints. And pleasant is that rest which is enjoyed in a Saviour's arms, and under the covert of his blood. It is honourable, as well as dutiful, to walk always as under his eye, and in conformity to him; in subjection to his will as our Father, and in dependence on him as our all-sufficient portion. The consideration that we are in the land of the living should quicken us to it. And it is delightful to speak and practise that which our heart believes upon God's testimony, ratified by the blood of his Son. But often, under strong temptations and in deep afflictions, the strongest believers have had their faith shaken, and have been surprised into thoughts and words extremely dishonourable to God. Yet he upholds all believers, and makes them quickly to change their voice. And O how pleasant it is to be so overwhelmed with a sense of God's love, that we scarcely know what praise, what vows, or what service to return him in gratitude! But while we praise him for what we have received, we must eagerly drink more and more of his cup of salvation, and receive more and more out of his fulness, and grace for grace. How precious and delightful to God is the death of his saints for, or in, the Lord! But much more that unparalleled death of Jesus Christ for the world, who loosed all our bonds and secured all our blessings.

PSALM CXVII. REFLECTIONS.—Thrice happy is the Gentile world when blessed with the fulness of Christ! Behold mercy preached, offered, and given to us! mercy abounding to the chief of sinners; mercy extending to millions of lost souls, and securing to all who believe, purity, strength, comfort, and glory! Behold also the unchangeable faithfulness of God, confirmed by his oath and blood, and engaged to make good to us all the promises of his everlasting word!

PSALM CXVIII. Ver. 5. I called. There are sufficient characteristics in this psalm to demonstrate that Christ is the speaker. But it is unnecessary to examine them, as the psalm is thrice in the New Testament directly applied to Christ; and, on one of these occasions, in his own presence, see ver. 26, compare with Mat. 21. 9; on another by his own lips, Mat. 23. 39; and again, ver. 22 is applied to our Lord by Peter, Ac. 4. 11. C.

Ver. 10. All nations, &c. This was literally fulfilled when the Jews in the persons of the congregated multitude, and the Romans in the persons of Pilate and the soldiers, encompassed our Lord at his trial and crucifixion. C.

Ver. 12. Destroy them. This has been fully verified in the dispersion of the Jews, and the utter dismemberment of the Roman empire; nay, in the literal destruction of the effeminate emperors, their profligate legions, and idolatrous subjects—by the irruption of those northern nations that now occupy their fields, their cities, and adopt their name. C.

Ver. 19. Surely none but Christ ever entered by the gates of righteousness, presenting himself 'without spot' before God. Others follow, only because washed by his blood, and accepted in him. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Animated are the saints' praises to their God, when the mercy that is in his nature and relation to all is clearly discerned; the mercies he hath granted are kindly reviewed; and the mercies he hath in store and in promise are firmly believed! No wonder that such invite all around them to sing of his everlasting mercy and grace! No wonder they pour contempt on all created confidences, and disregard all opposition from earth and hell! No wonder they ascribe the glory of all to God; that they ask all from God; that they gratefully dedicate themselves, and all that they have, to his service; and exert all their powers to exalt his honour and spread his renown!—But chiefly let us here behold Jesus and his sure mercies.—He was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death. Terrible was his distress, innumerable his conflicts with the enemies of our salvation! But, trusting in God, complete was his victory, and glorious his deliverance! Solemn was his ascen-

17 I[t] shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the LORD.

18 The[u] LORD hath chastened me sore; but he hath not given me over unto death.[7]

19 Open[v] to me the gates of righteousness: I will go into them, and I will praise the LORD:

27 God[e] is the LORD, which hath showed us light: [g]bind the sacrifice with cords, even unto the horns of the altar.

Noble specimens of corner-stones may still be seen at the angles of the massive wall of the temple inclosure in Jerusalem. The 'head-stone' signifies not the top-stone, but the chief stone. We would now term it the foundation stone.—P.

sion into heaven. And, crowned with glory and honour, invested with all power in heaven and on earth, and furnished with all gifts, all blessings, for men, he reigns upon his throne above. Encouraged by these views, let us welcome him into our hearts, families, and churches, and devote ourselves to his service. And believingly claiming him and his Father as our God, our all in all, let us ever exult in his praise.

PSALM CXIX. As in the works of God 'one star differeth from another star in glory,' it is not surprising if, in the Word of God, one portion is found to surpass another in the preciousness of its sacred contents. All parts of Scripture are alike true: yet are there various ways in which one portion may surpass another. Some parts surpass others because they concentrate truths of deeper interest; point the finger of their light towards fairer objects; stir up the weary spirit to higher aspirations; and minister to the sick soul the air and the sun of a brighter climate—and all this because they contain more than other portions do of the person, the humiliation, the sorrows, the fervent prayers, the strong cries, the flowing tears, and earnest supplications—and more of the death, the sacrifice, the resurrection, the righteousness, the intercession, and glory of Jesus!

Of Ps. cxix. all this is specially true; other psalms shine as suns in the firmament; this is a constellation of suns—a galaxy of divine light and glory—Jesus its 'all and in all.' That this may appear, the attention of the unprejudiced and godly reader is humbly solicited to the following facts: (1) One speaker, whoever he be, speaks of himself throughout the whole psalm. (2) The following is the speaker's character, drawn by himself, under the sure guidance of the Spirit of God: 'With my whole heart have I sought thee, ver. 10.—Thy word have I hid in my heart, that I might not sin against thee, 11.—With my lips have I declared all the judgments of thy mouth, 13.—I will not forget thy word, 16.—My soul breaketh for the longing that it hath unto thy judgments at all times, 20.—I have kept thy testimonies, 22.—Teach me, O Lord, the way of thy statutes, and I shall keep it unto the end, 33.—I shall keep thy law; I shall observe it with my whole heart, 34.—I shall keep thy law continually, for ever and ever, 44.—I have not declined from thy law, 51.—I have kept thy law, 55.—I kept thy precepts, 56.—I will keep thy precepts with my whole heart, 69.—I forsook not; I will never forget thy precepts, 87, 88.—Thou, through thy commandments, hast made me wiser than all mine enemies; for they (the commandments) are ever with me, 98.—I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts, 100.—I have refrained my feet from every evil way, 101.—I have not departed from thy judgments, 102.—I have sworn, and I will perform it, that I will keep thy righteous judgments, 106.—I do not forget thy law; I erred not from thy precepts; I have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes alway, 109-112.—I will keep the commandments of my God, 115.—I will have respect unto thy statutes continually. 117.—I have done judgment and justice, 124.—Thy testimonies are wonderful, therefore doth my soul keep them, 129.—My zeal hath consumed me, 139.—I cried with my whole heart; hear me, O Lord, I will keep thy statutes, 145.—I do not decline from thy testimonies, 157.—I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments; I have kept thy precepts and thy testimonies, for all my ways are before thee, 166-168.—I have chosen thy precepts; I do not forget thy commandments,' 173-176.

Now, that David never imagined such a character for himself is historically unquestionable. The finger of the Spirit of truth ever pointing to his sin renders the supposition impossible. Would Paul have mistaken the portrait for his own? When he dipped his pencil in colours of truth and light, he produced a portrait of himself, inscribed as 'the chief of sinners.' Who then is this? Say, is not this Jesus, the chiefest among ten thousand, and altogether lovely? Yes, this is unquestionably the guileless, the spotless Lamb, who magnified the law and made it honourable; who knew no sin, yet was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

In face of this inevitable conclusion, three difficulties present themselves: (1) In ver. 67 the speaker admits, 'Before I was afflicted, I went astray;' and does not this seem to imply an acknowledgment of personal error and sin? Not so, the difficulty arises from the translation. The word here translated 'went astray,' signifies to wander, either naturally or morally. Thus it is translated in a natural and not a moral sense, Ge. 21. 14; 37. 15. Now, if the natural sense explain the passage, and if the moral sense of wandering be utterly inconsistent with the asserted character of the speaker—a character, be it remembered, every word of which has passed the testing fire of the Holy Spirit, then surely there can be no doubt, that in the natural, and not in the moral sense, the word wandered is here to be taken. (2) A second obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm, arises from the frequent prayers of the speaker for teaching and guidance. But this obstruction arises merely from allowing the brilliancy of the Son's Godhead to dazzle and confuse the eyes in contemplating his manhood. Christ was truly God, Jn. 1.1. 14; he was as truly man, made in all things like unto his brethren, yet without sin. Now, in this humbled condition he appeared not in 'the form of God,' but 'the form of a servant.' And hence, 'though he were a Son, yet (being in servant form) learned he obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5. 8. And, as the teaching Spirit descends to us only by the prayer of Christ to the Father, Jn. 14. 16, so we behold our Lord, in the days of his flesh, call upon the Father for the same heavenly instruction. (3) The third obstruction to the acknowledgment of Jesus in this psalm is found in ver. 176, 'I have gone astray like a lost sheep.' This obstruction, however, is but another mistranslation. The word here translated 'gone astray,' is not the same that occurs in ver. 67. The word here used signifies to pant, and is so translated, Is. 21. 4. A more correct rendering is unquestionably as follows:—'I have panted as a sheep perishing,' and this is in perfect keeping with the life, toils, and condition of our Lord in the sorrowful days of his flesh. C.

[1] The meaning is, that at creation God established those great natural laws by which the physical universe is governed. These laws were the products of the divine will, and they are sustained in operation by the direct exercise of divine power. They are the servants of God, acting in obedience to his commands, and subject to be regulated and changed at his pleasure. Law is not above God: on the contrary, God is the author of all law, as well that which regulates the physical, as that which regulates the moral world.—P.

89 For[h] ever, O LORD, thy word is settled in heaven.[7]

90 Thy[i] faithfulness is unto all [8]generations: thou hast established the earth, and it [9]abideth.

91 They[j] continue this day according to thine ordinances: for all are thy servants.[1]

92 Unless[k] thy law had been my delights, I should then have perished in mine affliction.

93 I[l] will never forget thy precepts: for with them thou hast quickened me.

94 I[n] am thine, save me: for I have sought thy precepts.

95 The[o] wicked have waited for me to destroy me: but [p]I will consider thy testimonies.

96 I[q] have seen an end of all perfection: but [r]thy commandment is exceeding broad.

MEM.

97 O[s] how love I thy law! [t]it is my meditation all the day.

98 Thou, through thy commandments, [u]hast made me wiser than mine enemies;[2] for they are ever with me.[3]

99 I[v] have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation.

100 I[x] understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts.

101 I[y] have refrained my feet from every evil way, that I might keep thy word.

102 I[z] have not departed from thy judgments: for thou hast taught me.

103 How[a] sweet are thy words unto my taste![4] yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth!

104 Through[b] thy precepts I get understanding: therefore [c]I hate every false way.

mode of construction would give a somewhat stiff and constrained formality to the whole poem; yet such is not the case. The genius of the Hebrew poet overcame all restraints, and produced a work, perfect in form, and yet free, beautiful, and inspiring. It has been well said by a recent writer,—'If we would fathom the depth of meaning in the written law of Israel, if we would measure the elevation of soul, the hope, the confidence, even before princes and kings, which pious Jews derived from it, we must turn to this psalm. Here is an epitome of all true religion as conceived by the best spirits of that time.' P.

Ver. 1. Law. From a root signifying to teach. It here signifies all divine instruction. C.

Ver. 2. Testimonies. From a root comprehending the idea of futurity. The witnessings of God concerning things to come. C.

Ver. 4. Precepts. From a word signifying to visit, to inspect. Those orders and institutions that continually remind the church of the visitation of her omnipresent Head. C.

Ver. 5. Statutes. From a root signifying to engrave. These significant divine institutions in which man is specially required neither to add nor diminish. C.

Ver. 13. Were there no other note of character in the whole psalm, this alone seems sufficient to identify the speaker as Christ. Who else ever declared all the judgments of God?—Note, Law, testimonies, precepts, statutes, commandments, judgments, having been explained in notes on ver. 1–7, will not again be noticed. C.

Ver. 18. Those wondrous things that lay in its holy constitution—unbending justice, awful penalties, and glorious end; its successful teachings, bringing souls to Christ; and its marvellous result, in entering, that sin might abound; but effecting, in divine wisdom, that grace did much more abound. C.

Ver. 33. That Christ, though a Son, learned obedience through the things that he suffered, is the testimony of the Holy Spirit, He. 5. 8. He accordingly prays for the teaching he requires, and thereon resolves, as none but he could resolve without self-ignorance and self-reliance, that he shall keep the statutes of his Father to the end; that is, to the full production of everlasting righteousness, Ro. 10. 4. C.

Ver. 49. Wishes, expectations, and even hopes may be generated and sustained without any solid foundation. Thus it is said, the hypocrite's hope shall perish, Job 8 13; see also Pr. 11. 7. True Christian hope can rest upon no foundation but the revealed Word of God, the word of truth and of promise that can never mislead into error, or make ashamed by disappointment. C.

Ver. 67. I went astray. Whether these be taken as the words of Christ or of some of the prophets, they cannot be taken morally, for that would contradict ver. 22, 31, 51, 55, 56, 61. But these verses describe a character applicable to none but Christ. The translation, therefore, must be (see preface to this psalm), 'I wandered,' that is, as a stranger in a strange land, till by affliction, I learned the end and business of my incarnation, ver. 73, 'was made perfect,' He. 5. 8, as an example, 1 Pe. 2. 21, and as a High-priest and sacrifice, that my church might be saved, He. 8. 1–3; 9. 28. C.

Ver. 69. 'The word rendered forged means to patch together; and then it is applied to charges or accusations against any one, perhaps from their being made up (as they often are) of shreds and patches,—hints, small matters, things having no necessary connection in themselves, but brought together as if they pertained to the same transaction,—words dropped here and there in conversation, which, being artfully woven together, seem to make out a plausible case against a man. Most slanders are formed and sustained in this way; for it is rare that an absolutely forged slander is uttered against a man, or that a charge is brought which cannot be made to have plausibility from such circumstances as those referred to above' (Barnes). P.

109 My[j] soul is continually in my hand; yet[k] do I not forget thy law.

110 The[l] wicked have laid a snare for me; yet I erred not from thy precepts.

111 Thy[m] testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: [c]for they are the rejoicing of my heart.

112 I[p] have inclined mine heart to perform[6] thy statutes alway, [q]even unto the end.

SAMECH.

113 I[r] hate vain thoughts:[7] but[s] thy law do I love.

114 Thou[t] art my hiding-place[8] and my shield: I [u]hope in thy word.

115 Depart[v] from me, ye evil-doers: for I will keep the commandments of my God.

116 Uphold[x] me according unto thy word, that I may live: and let me not be [y]ashamed of my hope.

117 Hold[z] thou me up, and I shall be safe: and[a] I will have respect unto thy statutes continually.

118 Thou[b] hast trodden down all them that err from thy statutes: [c]for their deceit is falsehood.

119 Thou puttest away[9] all the wicked of the earth like dross: [d]therefore I love thy testimonies.

120 My[e] flesh trembleth for fear[1] of thee; and I am afraid of thy judgments.

AIN.

121 I[g] have done judgment and justice: [h]leave me not to mine oppressors.[2]

122 Be[i] surety for thy servant for good: let not the proud oppress me.

123 Mine[j] eyes fail for thy salvation, and for the word of thy righteousness.

124 Deal[k] with thy servant according unto thy mercy, and [l]teach me thy statutes.

125 I[m] am thy servant; [c]give me understanding, that I may know thy testimonies.

126 It[p] is time for thee, LORD, to work: for they have made void thy law.[3]

127 [q]Therefore[4] I love thy commandments above gold; yea, above fine gold.

128 Therefore[r] I esteem all thy precepts concerning all things to be right; and [s]I hate every false way.

PE.

3 The perfection of the law of God is set forth with great force and beauty in this psalm. It extends to the outward acts of man, to his words, and to the inmost thoughts and affections of his heart. 'It 's exceeding broad' and comprehensive. The psalmist is fully conscious of this. Another great truth is brought out in connection with the perfection of the law—namely, man's natural weakness, and the necessity for spiritual quickening to enable him to keep the divine law. He therefore prays repeatedly for quickening power.—P.

Ver. 83. A bottle in the smoke. First the weary soul fainted for salvation, ver. 81; then the straining eyes failed for the comfort of the word of promise; lastly, the frame became as a skin-bottle, dried and blackened in the smoke—a mean and despised receptacle in such mean and uncomfortable dwellings as the smoky cottages of the East still continue to present, from the roofs of which the skin-bottles, both for solids and fluids, are still found suspended. C.

Ver. 96. I have seen, &c. (1) In the word and covenant, ver. 89, 90; (2) in the stability of the earth, and its ordinances of the seasons, ver. 90, 91; (3) in the holy precepts of life and testimonies to hope, ver. 93–95; (4) in the afflictions which Christ endured, ver. 92, 95; and in which the length and breadth of his love constantly filled up the length and breadth of the law, Ro. 10. 8. C.

Ver. 100. I understand more than the ancients. 'Thou hast made me wiser than mine enemies,' ver. 98. 'I have more understanding than all my teachers,' Lu. 2. 46, 47. 'I understand more than the ancients,' would surely in the lips of any mere man be nothing but great swelling words of vanity. Would either Moses, David, or Solomon so have spoken in their own names? None of them would have dared so to speak of himself; Christ alone, endowed with the sevenfold gifts of the Spirit, Is. 11. 2, 3, and learning obedience by the things that he suffered, He. 5. 8, could so speak, and of him alone could the assertions be true. C.

Ver. 106. I have sworn. The power of human promise when assailed, not by unexpected, but even by foreseen temptation, receives a full and melancholy illustration in the case of our Lord's disciples, Mat. 26. 33, 35. Nor is the instructed believer ever ready to promise, much less to swear what he will do, without a prayer for preventing and assisting grace; but here is one who has sworn without reservation in the Amen he has affixed to the holy law—and who promises, in full assurance of inherent ability, ver. 112, to perform and keep God's righteous judgments. Say, can this be any other than the Christ? C.

Ver. 115. Depart from me. Contrast these words with the prophetic anticipation of judgment, Mat. 7. 23—and then say, are not these the words of Him who is appointed Judge of the quick and the dead? C.

Ver. 130. All human instruction comes by words spoken to the ear, or exhibited to the eye, or touch; these bring the light (manifestation) of natural things to the understanding. But these words always require more or less the aid of a teacher. So God known of old [b]that thou hast founded them for ever.

teaches by words: but his Spirit is the teacher that effects the entrance and diffuses the light of Jesus! C.

Ver. 139. My zeal hath consumed me. The quotation (Jn. 2. 17) from Ps. 69. 9, and, so far as it goes, its perfect parallelism to that in this verse, affords a farther evidence that this psalm is dictated by the Spirit in the person of Christ. C.

Ver. 142. The righteousness of God never means a rule of righteousness, any more than the love of God means a mere rule of love. The love of God means just the love of God; and the righteousness of God means just the righteousness of God, neither more nor less. It is the work which God the Father gave the Son to do; it is the work which God the Son performed. The creature righteousness was dissolved: the Godhead righteousness abideth for ever. C.

Ver. 148. Study, business, and piety alike court early and late hours. The student of nature, art, literature, or science awakes before the sun, outwatches the stars, and often disregards the sacrifice of health at the shrine of his beloved idol. The pursuit of riches claims votaries still more numerous and decided. And surely piety can claim no less. Wherefore, if its studies, privileges, and duties be shuffled into some mere corner of time and attention, what is it but a sure preparative for being speedily and finally cast away?—Note, The continuity of piety in thought, temper, reading, and prayer, is the only sufficient evidence of its sincerity and vitality. C.

Ver. 156. He that prays, 'O Lord, quicken me according to thy judgments,' must be one who has nothing to fear, because certain, when judged, to be justified in the Spirit, 1 Ti. 3. 16. C.

Ver. 157. Fear, favour, and covetousness are the three great causes of declining from a faithful adherence to the testimonies of God. Fear of suffering or loss begets base compliances with error. The favour of wicked men in power leads men away from truth by the influence of pride—while the 'love of money, the root of all evil,' bribes many to forsake what they believe to be true, follow what they know to be error, and practise what they feel to be sin. C.

Ver. 164. Seven times a-day. That seven signifies completeness is undoubted. It seems equally undoubted that here it signifies seven fixed and specific periods for secret prayer.—Note, Fixed times of prayer seem to many inconsistent with the freedom of Christianity and the circumstances of society. If piety were a restraint or a burden, this opinion might be true; but since it is a privilege and a blessing, it must be unfounded. C.

Ver. 169. Let my cry. A cry is the voice of a child in want or pain, or of man or woman in deep and poignant distress. Of the cries of our Lord in his distress we have no special record beyond that contained in Mat. 27. 46, 50. But Paul, by the Spirit, leads us more into the secret history of our Lord's heart, feelings, and sufferings, and declares, in accordance with all that is written of him in the Psalms, that, 'in the days of his flesh,' he 'offered up prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears, unto him that was able to save him from death, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Let this psalm be a touchstone by which I may try my heart and my life. Let me constantly inquire—Are these gracious tempers and holy exercises of faith, love, hope, humility, patience, and zeal, to be found in my soul? Has my heart, purged from an evil conscience in Jesus' blood, made these meditations, prayers, resolutions, and confessions truly my own? Is God's Word, his Testaments in Jesus' blood, the sole standard of all my faith and law of my practice? Is it the channel of Jesus' fulness of grace and comfort to my heart? Is it the instructor, the counsellor, the quickener, the medicine, the armour, the treasury, the wealth, the support, the guard, the joy, and the ALL of my soul? Do I receive it as a word to me from God, and use it as my plea with him for whatever I need? Happy is he that is thus living in these delightful exercises!

PSALM CXX. Title. This and the fourteen following psalms are entitled Songs of Degrees, or Ascending. Why or from whom they received this title, no man knows, and conjectures are manifold, but useless. C.

Ver. 1. In my distress. There can be no question that Ps. cxviii. is delivered in the name of Christ. See ver. 22. On comparing this verse with Ps. 118. 5, the identity of the speaker in the two psalms will scarcely be questioned. Comp. also Ps. lii. C.

Ver. 4. In ver. 3 a question is asked substantially as follows:—'What shall the deceitful tongue give thee—what will it do to thee?' Reference is made to the person who uses his tongue in this manner. What effect will it entail upon him—what punishment will it bring? The reply is given in ver. 4, in language highly figurative. It will entail such punishment as would be inflicted by the sharp arrows of the warrior; it will bring such exquisite pain as would be produced by the glowing coals of juniper, the heat of which is intense. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Inveterate malice against the saint never refuses the basest means of venting itself: and it is the saints' ordinary lot to be virulently reproached by the wicked. But dreadful, penetrating, destructive, furious, and lasting is the ruin of their reproachers at last! It is grievous for the lovers of God to be long removed from public ordinances, or to be forced by necessity into continued connections with the wicked. But every one born of God ought to be a child of peace. Envy and strife are all from hell. And though others continue inveterate, we ought to abound in charity, and follow the things which make for peace.

PSALM CXXI. Ver. 1. The margin, Boothroyd, and other high authorities, read this verse as two questions, and this sense seems preferable. C.

Ver. 3. Recollecting first that this, being a promise of the Spirit, must be true—then there will be little difficulty in concluding that such a promise could only be realized in Christ. See also ver. 7, 8. Here the church, by the Spirit, replies to Christ, and ministers to him promises nearly parallel to those in Ps. xci. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every difficulty our eyes ought to be fixed on God, in his temple, his Christ, his heaven, as the author of our help, protection, and deliverance. He is a sure refuge to them who flee to him; and with him nothing is impossible. In him nothing good can be wanting, no direction, no preservation; and in him no troubles can hurt us.

DAMASCUS GATE—OPENING TOWARDS NAZARETH. [Psalms, cxxii:2.]—"Our feet shall stand within thy gates, O Jerusalem." Damascus gate, or the gate of the column through which passes the north road to Galilee and Damascus, is the most ornamental of all the gates which stand in the walls of Jerusalem. It is made picturesque because of its many turrets and battlements. The Damascus gate, according to Bartlet, is a fine piece of Saracenic architecture. Other authorities claim that it dates back to a more remote antiquity than Bartlet supposes. This gate is not a great ways from the place supposed by many now to be the site of Mount Calvary. The tombs of the kings are about 1100 paces north of Damascus gate. Next to Jaffa gate, the Damascus gate is the one most frequently used of any in the Jerusalem walls.

PSALM CXXII. Ver. 1. I was glad. There is clearly but a single speaker in ver. 1, 8, 9, and this is the Prince of peace, who alone has power to grant true peace to his church. Jn. 14. 27. C.

Ver. 6. Pray. Intercession forms, at present, the great work of Christ in heaven, He. 7. 25; and if Christ be in us the hope of glory, Col. 1. 27, his power and presence will chiefly appear in the concurrence of our spirit with his. C.

Ver. 8. For my brethren. Can Christ ever call sinners brethren? The mystery is solved by their 'being born again of water and of the Spirit,' and therefore he is not ashamed to call them brethren. He. 2. 11, 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.—They who love God himself cannot but delight to draw near unto him in the ordinances of his worship; cannot but love his church, and be earnestly concerned in prayer and in practice for her real welfare. From regard to the saints, who are therein begotten and nourished up to eternal life, and especially from regard to the honour of her God, they will constantly seek her good.

PSALM CXXIII. Ver. 2. In several eastern countries, masters and mistresses call their servants by clapping the hands: and direct them in their work by signs, often imperceptible to strangers. Some interpreters think the verse refers to servants condemned to punishment, and watching for a sign of mitigation or forgiveness. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In what a humble, resigned, and obedient temper, and with what earnestness, ought we to look up to God for help and deliverance. While his great mercy encourages us, our great contempt and trouble should drive us to his throne of grace, and oblige us to wait upon him till he grant our requests.

PSALM CXXIV. REFLECTIONS.—How furiously the enemies of the church rage against her, and threaten to carry all before them! But power and policy in vain unite to destroy the souls faithful to our God. And when we are in appearance nearest to be overcome and perish, we then may be made more eminently to experience the salvation of God.

PSALM CXXV. Ver. 2. Jerusalem stands on the summit of a broad mountain ridge, which is broken into a wilderness of bare crowns of limestone, separated by deep ravines. Upon two of these crowns, Zion and Moriah, the ancient city was founded; and these two were bounded on the east by the valley of Kidron, and on the west and south by Hinnom. All around the site are loftier summits—nothing approaching to mountains, but rounded, irregular ridges, overtopping the buildings of the city from 50 to 200 ft. Thus it is that 'the mountains are round about Jerusalem.' P.

Ver. 3. Righteous. Those who, by faith of Jesus Christ, are endowed and clothed with 'the righteousness of God,' Phi. 3. 9. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who trust in the Lord! Immovable is their spiritual state. They MOUNT OF OLIVES—OVER WHICH CHRIST WALKED TO THE HOME OF MARY AND MARTHA. [Psalms, cxxv:2.]—"As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people from henceforth even forever." East of the valley of Jehoshaphat rises the Mount of Olives. This is one of the mountains which the Psalmist refers to as standing round about Jerusalem. There are a number of olive trees still found upon the mountain, and upon its western base is a cluster of ancient ones known throughout the world to indicate the Garden of Gethsemane. The top of this mountain is held by many to be the place where the Savior left the earth, and his footsteps are still shown to those who are willing to believe extraordinary things. According to the Scripture, Christ ascended from Bethany. From the top of the Mount of Olives we have the most commanding view of the city of Jerusalem.

crooked ways, the LORD shall lead them forth with the workers of iniquity: [h]but peace shall be upon Israel.

PSALM CXXVI.

1 The church, celebrating her incredible return out of captivity, 4 prayeth for, and prophesieth her own future joyfulness.

[a]A song of degrees.

WHEN the LORD turned again the captivity of Zion,[1] we[b] were like them that dream.

2 Then[c] was our mouth filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing: then [d]said they among the heathen, The LORD hath done great things for them.[2]

3 The[e] LORD hath done great things for us, whereof we are glad.

4 Turn[g] again our captivity, O LORD, as the streams in the [3]south.[4]

5 They[h] that sow in tears shall reap in joy.[5]

6 He[i] that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed,[6] shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him.

PSALM CXXVII.

1 The vanity of human endeavours without God's blessing. 3 Children are God's gift.

[a]A song of degrees for Solomon.[1]

EXCEPT [b]the LORD build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the LORD keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain.

2 It is vain for you to [c]rise up early, to sit up late, to eat [d]the bread of sorrows; for [e]so he giveth his beloved sleep.

3 Lo,[g] children are an heritage of the LORD; and the fruit of the womb is his reward.

4 As[h] arrows are in the hand of a mighty man; so are children of the youth.

5 Happy[i] is the man that hath his quiver full of[2] them: they[j] shall not be ashamed, but they shall speak[3] with the enemies in the gate.

PSALM CXXVIII.

The sundry blessings which follow them that fear God.

[a]A song of degrees.

BLESSED [b]is every one that feareth the LORD; that walketh in his ways.

2 For[c] thou shalt eat the labour of thine hands: [d]happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee.

3 Thy[e] wife shall be as a fruitful vine by the sides of thine house; [g]thy children like olive plants round about thy table.

4 Behold, that thus shall the man be blessed that feareth the LORD.

5 The[h] LORD shall bless thee out of Zion: and thou shalt see [i]the good of Jerusalem all the days of thy life.

6 Yea, [j]thou shalt see thy children's children, and peace upon Israel.

PSALM CXXIX.

1 An exhortation to praise God for saving Israel in their great afflictions. 5 The haters of the church are cursed.

[a]A song of degrees.

MANY a[b] time have they afflicted me from my [c]youth, may Israel now say:

2 Many a time have they afflicted me from my youth; yet [d]they have not prevailed against me.

3 The [e]ploughers ploughed upon my back: they made long their furrows.

4 The[g] LORD is righteous: he hath cut asunder the cords of the wicked.[1]

5 Let[h] them all be confounded and turned back that hate Zion.

6 Let[i] them be as the grass upon the housetops, which withereth afore it groweth up;[2]

7 Wherewith the mower filleth not his hand, nor he that bindeth sheaves his bosom.

8 Neither do they which go by say, [j]The blessing of the LORD be upon you: we bless you in the name of the LORD.[3]

PSALM CXXX.

1 The psalmist, in distress, professeth his hope in prayer, 5 and his patience in hope. 7 He exhorteth Israel to hope in God.

[a]A song of degrees.

OUT of[b] the depths have I cried unto thee, O LORD.

2 LORD,[c] hear my voice: let thine ears be attentive to the voice of my supplications.

3 If[d] thou, LORD, shouldest mark iniquities, O LORD, who shall stand?

4 But there is [e]forgiveness with thee, [g]that thou mayest be feared.

5 I[h] wait for the LORD, my soul doth wait, and in his word do I hope.

6 My[i] soul waiteth for the LORD more than they that watch for the morning:[1] I say, more than they that watch for the morning.

7 Let[j] Israel hope in the LORD: [k]for with the LORD there is mercy, and with him is plenteous redemption.

4 Literally, 'Turn our captivity, O Jehovah, as the torrents in the Negeb.' Negeb was the proper name for that section of Palestine which embraced the southern slopes of the range of Judea, and the border land of the great wilderness about Beersheba. Its streams were all winter torrents. They flowed only whilst the winter rains were falling, and in early summer they became completely dry, remaining so till the early rains of autumn. The idea here is—The stream of exiles returning to Palestine is now dry; let it become full like the streams of the Negeb at the time of the winter rains.—P.

are established, guarded, and protected by God; and, in performance of his promise, he will supply them with everything good. But dreadful and lasting is their misery who apostatize from him to the paths of wickedness!

PSALM CXXVI. Ver. 1. When. The when in this verse, like the now in Ps. 124. 1, is confined to no special period; for the whole history of Israel, from the moment they became a people, has been a history of captivities in the hands of enemies, and merciful deliverances by the hand of their God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—God's church is often in great tribulation for a time: and no deliverance comes till God himself effect it. Noted deliverances make observers to wonder, and saints to rejoice. But the more his people are now exercised in spiritual mourning, the more remarkable shall be their fruits of holiness and joy.

PSALM CXXVII. Ver. 2. So. 'Surely' (Horne). The affections of God's children are set upon things above: and though not free from sorrow or anxiety, they are always able to cast their cares upon him that careth for them, 1 Pe. 5. 7. Therefore, while the world waketh, God's beloved sleep; yea, in hours of deepest calamity he sends them the repose that a purified conscience can alone confer. Argyle slept in calm composure the night before his martyrdom: his chief persecutor saw it, and never forgot this miracle of grace. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The less we depend upon our own schemes, or lean to our own understanding, and the more we look up to God for help and direction, the better shall we prosper. The most prudent projects and plans, the most anxious cares, and the most toilsome labours, are all to no purpose without God's blessing. But happy in their rest, and happier in their dutiful children, are they whom he blesses!

PSALM CXXVIII. Ver. 2. To many nothing appears more irksome or more degrading than labour. In the view of God it is blessed; and gratefully to enjoy the produce of a man's toil, is declared to be a special mark of the divine goodness. C.

Ver. 5. Thou shalt see the good of Jerusalem. The believer always sees the good, even of the natural Jerusalem; he sees it in her present converts to Jesus, and her future restoration. Of the spiritual Jerusalem, the good is visible to sense, as well as to faith. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How excellent and profitable is real and experimental godliness, issuing in a holy practice! It draws the blessing of God upon our labours, our families, on the church of God, and on our posterity.

PSALM CXXIX. Ver. 1. The now here, as in Ps. 124. 1, refers to no particular time in the history of Israel; but was true at all times since Israel was first persecuted by Esau. And surely till the end, 'all who live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution,' 2 Ti. 3. 12. C.

Ver. 2. Prevailed. That is, they have not prevailed to lead

1 David, professing his humility, 3 exhorteth Israel to hope in God.

[a]A song of degrees of David.

2 Surely I have behaved and quieted [3]myself, [c]as a child that is weaned of his mother: my soul is even as a weaned child.

PSALM CXXXII.

1 David, in his prayer, commendeth unto God the religious care he had for the ark. 8 His prayer at the removing of the ark, 11 with a repetition of God's promises.

[a]A song of degrees.

LORD, remember [b]David, and all his [c]afflictions: 2 How[d] he sware unto the LORD, and vowed unto [e]the mighty God of Jacob;

3 Surely I [g]will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed;

4 I will not give sleep to mine eyes, or slumber to mine eyelids,

5 Until I find out [h]a place for the LORD, an habitation[1] for the mighty God of Jacob.

6 Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah:[2] we found it in the [3]fields of the wood.[4]

7 We[i] will go into his tabernacles: we will worship at his footstool.[5]

4 The meaning of ver. 5, 6 is very obscure. Probably it is as follows:—The ark of the Lord was at a distance from the royal residence. When brought back from Philistia it had been deposited in a house near Kirjath-Jearim. Whether it remained there stationary, or was occasionally carried about, does not appear. Eventually David prepared a splendid tabernacle on Mount Zion for it; and when he had completed the tabernacle he sent to bring the ark. The event is celebrated in this passage. The messengers sent to bring it, heard of it at Ephratah—not Bethlehem, but some other place of that name near Kirjath-Jearim. The last clause of ver. 6 may be rendered, 'We found it in the fields of Jearim;' i.e. in a house within the territory of Jearim, though outside the town.—P.

11 The[n] LORD hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; [o]Of the fruit of thy body[6] will I set upon thy throne.

12 If[p] thy children will keep my covenant and my testimony that I shall teach them, their children shall also sit upon thy throne for evermore.

13 For[q] the LORD hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation.

14 This[r] is my rest for ever: here will I dwell; for I have desired it.

15 I[s] will abundantly[7] bless her provision; [t]I will satisfy her poor with bread:

16 I[u] will also clothe her priests with salvation; and her saints shall shout aloud for joy.

17 There[v] will I make the horn of David to bud: I have ordained a lamp[8] for mine anointed.

18 His[x] enemies will I clothe with shame: but [y]upon himself shall his crown flourish.

PSALM CXXXIII.

The blessedness of unity among brethren.

[a]A song of degrees of David.

BEHOLD, how[b] good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity![1]

2 It is like the [c]precious ointment[2] upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard; that went down to the [3]skirts of his garments;

3 As the dew of [d]Hermon, and as the dew that descended upon the mountains of [4]Zion: for [e]there the LORD commanded the blessing, even life for evermore.

PSALM CXXXIV.

An exhortation to God's servants to bless God.

[a]A song of degrees.

BEHOLD, bless[b] ye the LORD, all ye servants of the LORD, which by night[1] stand in the house of the LORD.

Israel into apostasy, as Midian, Nu. 25. 2, 3, and afterwards Antiochus, severally attempted—nor have they prevailed to extirpate the nation, as Haman sought, and several Gentile nations have since endeavoured. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In every age the seed of the serpent has raged in enmity against Jesus Christ and his church. There is no going honourably to heaven but through great tribulation. But let the wicked lay their plots, and execute them as they will, God will deliver all who accept Christ; and unbelievers shall plunge themselves at last into the most dreadful disappointment and ruin. The curse of God shall blast them, with all their schemes and attempts.

PSALM CXXX. Ver. 1. On comparing this verse with Ps. 40. 1, 2, &c., there can be no doubt of their parallelism: but that Ps. xl. is spoken in the person of Christ, is settled by the quotation, He. 10. 5, whence it follows that in this psalm the speaker also is Messiah. C.

Ver. 3. If thou shouldst mark down sins indelibly, instead of cleansing them away in the blood of the Lamb, who would dare to appear before thee under such innumerable and condemning stains? C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the most fearful manner God often corrects his own children in their way to his kingdom. But while there is a praying heart within them, and a prayer-hearing God above them, there is no ground of despair. Sense of guilt is the first thing that strikes the mind of a convinced sinner; and did not God manifest his forgiving mercy, it would drive him to despair. But the faith of God's forgiving our sins, for Christ's sake, bestirs a holy awe of, regard to, and earnest waiting for him. And the more we taste of God's forgiving and redeeming goodness, the more shall we encourage others to flee to him, and hope in him, in the time of great guilt and trouble. And not only is God ready to, but he certainly will, accomplish the perfect redemption of all his people from sin and all its consequences.

PSALM CXXXI. Ver. 1. My heart is not haughty. The true description of him who said, 'Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden,' 'learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls,' Mat. 11. 28, 29. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Humility is the ornament of every station. A child-like spirit, meek and weaned from the things of this world, is a good symptom of a gracious heart. But to wade out of our depth, either in religion, learning, or power, is dangerous. And proud looks show a proud heart. If we are in trouble, let us patiently hope and wait till God bring us out of it. They who hope in Jesus Christ, and wait for his salvation, shall partake of it in time and in eternity.

PSALM CXXXII. Ver. 1. (1) Some suppose this psalm was written on occasion of bringing the ark from Baale, 2 Sa. vi. (2) Others, from comp. ver. 8, 9 with 2 Ch. 6. 41, 42, suppose it written by Solomon for the dedication of the temple. (3) While A. Clarke supposes it written for the dedication of the second temple. On the first of these suppositions, it is impossible to reconcile ver. 2–5 with the history in 2 Sa. 6. 9–15. And as to the second and third, neither can be reconciled with ver. 18, in which David is presented alive; whereas, at the dedication of the first temple he was ten or eleven years dead. Are we not, therefore, to understand by 'David and his afflictions,' the beloved Son of God and his sufferings? with his covenant obligations not to enter into his rest until he had found, in the heart of every believer, a residence for the Father and the Son? Jn. 14. 23. C.

Ver. 6. We heard of it. That is, of a place for the Lord—at Ephratah; that is, Bethlehem Ephratah, where the prophet foretold that Jesus (the true and living temple) should be born, Mi. 5. 2; Mat. 2. 6.—Fields of the wood. Synonymous with Ephratah—an obscure village, situated in the midst of woods. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Great is the mercy to have fervent prayers of our own, or of our ancestors, lying before God's throne of grace. They shall receive a gracious answer at last. Lively and zealous saints can never be at ease till the ordinances of God be regularly and honourably settled, and his presence vouchsafed, to the comfort and edification of both ministers and people. However meanly the ark of God, or even Jesus Christ himself, reside for a time, its dwelling shall at last, and for ever, be glorious. Multitudes shall flock to it; and great fellowship with God shall be there enjoyed. Happy was David's family and kingdom on Christ's account: but infinitely happier in this is the family and church of God. In virtue of JEHOVAH'S new covenant with him, his people are blessed with his presence, and with spiritual dignity, provision, salvation, and joy; while Jesus himself triumphs in everlasting honours, and unbelievers are reduced to disappointment, misery, and shame.

PSALM CXXXIII. REFLECTIONS.—Scarcely anything more ruinous hath befallen the church of God than the manifold divisions, disputes, and animosities of her members. Since God's children have one Father, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, they ought to have one heart and mind; to be united in the same worship, and affectionate in their regards to bearing with, forbearing, and forgiving one another; and only jealous who shall show the most abundant meekness, charity, and kindness to each other: this would mark them as anointed by the Spirit of Christ; would be refreshing and fructifying to their hearts and lives; and prepare them for the eternal life and blessedness above.

PSALM CXXXIV. REFLECTIONS.—How constant and active ought ministers to be in their service

1 An exhortation to God's servants to praise him for his goodness, 5 for his power, 8 for his judgments. 15 The vanity of idols. 19 An exhortation to bless God.

PRAISE ye[a] the LORD. Praise ye the name[1] of the LORD; praise him, O ye servants of the LORD.

2 Ye that [b]stand in the house of the LORD, in the courts of the house of our God,

3 Praise[c] the LORD; for the LORD is good: sing praises unto his name; [d]for it is pleasant.

4 For[e] the LORD hath chosen Jacob[2] unto himself, and Israel[3] for his peculiar treasure.

5 For I know that [g]the LORD is great, and that our LORD is above all gods.

6 Whatsoever[h] the LORD pleased, that did he in heaven, and in earth, in the seas, and all deep places.[4]

7 He[i] causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth; he maketh lightnings for the rain; he bringeth the wind out of his treasuries.

8 Who[j] smote the first-born of Egypt, both of man and beast.[5]

9 Who[k] sent tokens and wonders into the midst of thee, O Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his servants.

10 Who[l] smote great nations, and slew mighty kings:

11 Sihon king of the Amorites, and Og king of Bashan, and all the kingdoms of Canaan:

12 And gave their land for an [6]heritage, [m]an heritage unto Israel his people.

13 Thy[o] name, O LORD, endureth for ever; and thy memorial, O LORD, throughout all generations.[7]

14 For[p] the LORD will judge his people; and he will repent himself concerning his servants.[8]

15 The[q] idols of the heathen are silver and gold, the work of men's hands.

16 They have mouths, but they speak not; eyes have they, but they see not;

17 They have ears, but they hear not; neither is there any breath in their mouths.

18 They[r] that make them are like unto them: so is every one that trusteth in them.

PSALM CXXXVI.

An exhortation to give thanks to God for his mercies particularly enumerated.

O GIVE [a]thanks unto the LORD; for he is good: for his mercy endureth for ever.[1]

2 O give thanks unto the [b]God of gods:[2] for his mercy endureth for ever.

3 O give thanks unto the [c]LORD of lords: for his mercy endureth for ever.

4 To him [d]who alone doeth great wonders: for his mercy endureth for ever.

5 To[e] him that by wisdom made the heavens: for his mercy endureth for ever.

6 To[g] him that stretched out the earth [3]above the waters: for his mercy endureth for ever.

7 To[h] him that made great lights: for his mercy endureth for ever:

8 The sun[4] to rule by day: for his mercy endureth for ever:

9 The moon and stars to rule by night: for his mercy endureth for ever.

10 To[i] him that smote Egypt in their first-born:[5] for his mercy endureth for ever:

11 And[j] brought out Israel from among them: for his mercy endureth for ever:

12 With a strong hand, and with a stretched-out arm: for his mercy endureth for ever.

of Christ and his church! how remarkably given to prayer and praise! And the more men wait upon God, the more they shall find the blessedness of his service. But it is only as enthroned in Zion, in his temple, in Christ, and his church, that God bestows his salvation.

PSALM CXXXV. Ver. 2. Those 'that stand in the house of the Lord' are the priests and Levites in office: those that 'stand in the courts' represent worshippers not in office.—Note. It is not visible office, but inward worship, that constitutes nearness to God. C.

Ver. 7. He causeth the vapours, &c. To the vaporization of water by heat, and its solution in the atmosphere, the earth and its inhabitants are indebted for the innumerable blessings derived from the clouds. The amount of vaporization is truly astonishing. The sacred Jordan flows into the Dead Sea—the mighty Wolga into the Caspian—the Atlantic flows into the Mediterranean—so does the Euxine with all its tributaries—so does the Nile, and so do many rivers from Asia Minor—yet none of these seas has any outlets, all their waters are vaporized, and carried in clouds either to veil or irrigate the most distant lands.—He maketh lightnings, &c. To restore the clouds to the state of water, electricity or lightning is necessary; and what philosophical observation has thus seemed to discover in modern times, Scripture has long since expressly revealed. C.

Ver. 18. Are like unto them. As blind intellectually as the idols are naturally; and as deaf to the voice that speaks to reason and conscience, as they to the voice that addresses the outward ear. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The people of God should be always exercised in the most solid, extensive, and lasting joys. Everything in God's purpose, promise, nature, and works is a delightful ground thereof. And the more he is to us, or does for us, and the more we are related to him, or trust in him, the more we ought to abound in his praise. Our view of the base and insignificant idols of others, and of the stupidity of their votaries, should stir us up the more to trust in, admire, and praise our God of unbounded perfection.

PSALM CXXXVI. Ver. 1. 'For his tender mercy is to the coming age;' which includes not merely the history of mercy in past deliverances and present blessings, but the (then) future mercies in the expected coming of Messiah, and the (now) future mercies and glories of his coming again 'the second time without sin to salvation.' C.

Ver. 4. Great wonders. Miracles, as in Egypt—at the Red Sea—and in the wilderness, where he fed his people with bread from heaven. C.

Ver. 25. When the extent of animal life is examined, and the amount of food for its support calculated—and when the living God, not unintelligent nature, is considered as the giver both of life and food, then will this verse suggest a most prolific source of praise. But when the sight is carried beyond the 'bread that perisheth,' to that which 'endures to eternal life; and when

21 And[r] gave their land[8] for an heritage: for his mercy endureth for ever:

22 Even an heritage unto Israel his servant: for his mercy endureth for ever.

23 Who[s] remembered us in our low estate: for his mercy endureth for ever:

24 And hath redeemed us from our enemies: for his mercy endureth for ever.

25 Who[t] giveth food to all flesh: for his mercy endureth for ever.

26 O [u]give thanks unto the God of heaven: for his mercy endureth for ever.

PSALM CXXXVIII.

1 David praiseth God for the truth of his word. 4 He prophesieth that the kings of the earth shall praise God. 7 He professeth his confidence in God.

A psalm of David.

I WILL praise[a] thee with my whole heart: before[b] the gods will I sing praise unto thee.

2 I[c] will worship toward thy holy temple, and[d] praise thy name for thy loving-kindness and for thy truth: for [e]thou hast magnified thy word above all thy name.

3 In[g] the day when I cried thou answeredst me, and [h]strengthenedst me with strength in my soul.

4 All[i] the kings of the earth shall praise thee, O LORD, when they hear the words of thy mouth.[1]

5 Yea, they shall sing in the ways of the LORD: for [j]great is the glory of the LORD.

6 Though[k] the LORD be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly: but the proud he knoweth afar off.[2]

7 Though I walk in the midst of [l]trouble, thou wilt revive me: thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me.

8 The[n] LORD will perfect that which concerneth me:[3] thy[o] mercy, O LORD, endureth for ever: [p]forsake not the works of thine own hands.

PSALM CXXXIX.

1 David praiseth God for his all-seeing providence, 17 and for his infinite mercies. 19 He defieth the wicked. 23 He prayeth for sincerity.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

O LORD, thou[a] hast searched me, and known me.

2 Thou knowest my [b]down-sitting, and mine up-rising; [c]thou understandest my thought afar off.[1]

3 Thou compassest[2] my path, and my lying down, and art [d]acquainted with all my ways.

4 For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O LORD, [e]thou knowest it altogether.

5 Thou[g] hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me.

6 Such[h] knowledge is too wonderful for me; it is high, I cannot attain[3] unto it.

7 Whither[i] shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?

8 If[j] I ascend up into heaven, thou art there: if I make my bed in hell,[4] behold,[k] thou art there.

9 If I take the wings of the morning,[5] and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea;

10 Even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me.

11 If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; [l]even the night shall be light about me.

12 Yea, the darkness [n]hideth[6] not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike[7] to thee.

* 'This psalm relates to the omnipresence of God, and contains such reflections as would recur to one meditating on that attribute of Deity. It is the most distinct and full statement of that doctrine which is to be found in the Hebrew Scriptures, and the doctrine is presented in language which has never been surpassed for sublimity and beauty. The leading idea in the psalm seems to be that of comfort from the fact that God is everywhere; that he knows all that pertains to us; that we can never be hidden from his view; that he has known us from the beginning; that as he fashioned and formed us—making us what we are—he knows all our necessities and can supply them' (Barnes).—P.

REFLECTIONS.—Alas! how averse are mankind to the infinitely reasonable and delightful duty of praise and thanksgiving! They need repeated calls to it, even after it has been attended with remarkable blessings. God's mercy and goodness delightfully fill his nature and works, the most awful and tremendous not excepted. And stupid and careless observers must they be of creatures and events, who do not everywhere perceive the manifold and everlasting mercy and kindness of God. Past mercies ought never to be forgotten, nor present ones overlooked; and all should issue in repeated returns of grateful praise

PSALM CXXXVII. Ver. 1. The chief rivers of the Babylonian empire were, the united Euphrates and Tigris, which, dividing into several branches, form many rivers. See Eze. 1. 1; Da. 8. 2. Of the united Euphrates and Tigris, and the canals traversing the city to water its palaces, parks, and gardens, the psalm evidently seems to speak. C.

Ver. 2. Babylon was a square sixty miles in circuit; its streets fifteen miles in length. There will, therefore, be no difficulty in imagining how in so many squares as the city afforded, there would be a profusion of willows for the harps of the melancholy exiles. C.

Ver. 3. Want of sympathy with the feelings of others is one of the commonest forms of human selfishness—of human sinfulness. C.

Ver. 9. Happy. This implies no praise of deeds of horror, but the honour due to the judge who pronounces sentence against an incorrigible criminal. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The sins of God's people often reduce them to great misery on earth. They are often taught the worth of ordinances by the want of them: and their temple songs are turned into howlings and grief. But cruel are the tender mercies of the wicked to God's suffering saints. And it is base and blasphemous to insult them with their worshipping of God. Sacred songs ill suit the call or company of profane scoffers. That which is holy ought not to be given to dogs, nor pearls cast before swine. The interest of Jesus' church and kingdom must ever be dearer to us than our life: and if duty be once clear, nothing must deter us from it. Not selfish desire, but holy zeal, must dictate our requests for the blessings of God on the church. Malicious and inhuman is all wickedness, and tremendous and correspondent is the punishment of it!

13 For [o]thou hast possessed my reins: thou hast covered me in my mother's womb.

14 I will praise thee; for [p]I am fearfully and wonderfully made: [q]marvellous are thy works; and that my soul knoweth right well.[8]

15 My[r] substance[9] was not hid from thee, when I was made in [s]secret, and curiously wrought in the lowest parts of the earth.[1]

16 Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect; and in thy book all[2] my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned,[3] when[t] as yet there was none of them.[4]

17 How[u] precious also are thy thoughts unto me, O God! how great is the sum of them!

18 If I should count them, they are more in number than the sand: [v]when I awake, I am still with thee.

19 Surely[z] thou wilt slay the wicked, O God: depart[y] from me therefore, ye bloody men.

20 For[z] they speak against thee wickedly, and thine enemies take thy name in vain.

21 Do[a] not I hate[5] them, O LORD, that hate thee? and am not I grieved with those that rise up against thee?

22 I hate them with perfect hatred; I count them mine enemies.

23 Search[b] me, O God, and know my heart; try me, and know my thoughts;

24 And[c] see if there be any [6]wicked way[7] in me, and lead me in [d]the way everlasting.

PSALM CXL.

1 David prayeth to be delivered from the mischief of his enemies. 8 He prayeth against them. 12 He comforteth himself by confidence in God.

To the chief musician, A psalm of David.

DELIVER me,[a] O LORD, from the evil man: preserve me from the violent man;[1]

2 Which[b] imagine mischiefs in their heart: continually are they gathered together for war.

3 They[c] have sharpened their tongues like a serpent: [d]adders' poison is under their lips. Selah.

4 Keep[d] me, O LORD, from the hands of the wicked; preserve me from the violent man, who have purposed to overthrow my goings.

5 The[e] proud have hid a snare for me, and cords; they have spread a net by the way-side; they have set gins for me. Selah.[2]

6 I[g] said unto the LORD, Thou art my God: hear the voice of my supplications, O LORD.

7 O GOD the Lord, [h]the strength of my salvation, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle.[3]

8 Grant[i] not, O LORD, the desires of the wicked: further not his wicked device,[4] lest they exalt themselves. Selah.

9 As[j] for the head of those that compass me about, let the mischief of their own lips cover them.[5]

10 Let[k] burning coals fall upon them: let them be cast into the fire; into [l]deep pits, that they rise not up again.[6]

11 Let not [7]an evil-speaker[8] be established in the earth: evil shall hunt the violent man to [m]overthrow him.[9]

12 I know [n]that the LORD will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor.

13 Surely the [o]righteous shall give thanks unto thy name: the upright shall [p]dwell in thy presence.

PSALM CXLI.

1 David prayeth that his suit may be acceptable, 3 his conscience free from guilt, 7 and his life safe from the snares of the wicked.

2 Let my prayer be set forth[2] before thee [b]as incense; [c]and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice.

PSALM CXXXVIII. Ver. 1. When it is considered (1) That the speaker is one; (2) That he promises unreservedly his whole heart; and (3) That these words are a distinct parallel to Ps. 18. 49; Ro. 15. 9, then there can remain little question that the speaker is Christ. C.

Ver. 2. Magnified thy word. Thy word of promise, in its actual fulfilment, has magnified thee beyond all that thy name had led thy people to expect. See notes on Ex. 34. 5; Ps. 8. 1. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The greatest on earth need not be ashamed of the public and regular worship of God. And the more he manifests his loving-kindness and faithfulness in the fulfilment of his word to us, the more high and hearty ought to be our notes of praise. If we trust to his truth, he will display every perfection, and make every creature to work together for the glorious accomplishment of his word. If we flee to God in prayer, he will not leave us destitute. And if he, by our afflictions, strengthen us inwardly in our souls, we are great gainers. The cheerful behaviour of saints in the ways of God engages their neighbours to join with them in it. And the more humble men are, the more God regards and exalts them. And nothing is more detestable to him than indulged pride. Whatever trouble God casts his people into, he will protect and preserve them in it. And the good works of grace or salvation which he begins, he will perfect at last. He will never leave nor forsake his own. Let us then trust in him at all times, and pour out our hearts before him.

PSALM CXXXIX. Ver. 1. The speaker is one throughout the whole psalm—one still with God, ver. 18—one who drives far from him all 'bloody men,' ver. 19, who hates them with 'perfect hatred;' and who, so far from shrinking from the eye of omniscience, boldly requests to be both 'searched' and 'tried.' Let any one read and study these characteristics, and say, Is not this the Christ? C.

Ver. 2. Afar off—'of old,' that date described, Pr. 8. 22–31; from 'before God's works of old—from everlasting—from the beginning—before the earth was.' C.

Ver. 7. Spirit, when contrasted with presence, literally faces, means the Holy Spirit, Jn. 14. 16, 17, 26. This passage asserts, in the strongest manner, the omnipresence of the Spirit: but whoever is omnipresent must be God. C.

Ver. 12. That darkness to one creature is light to another is beyond question. This consideration may help our infirmity in discerning how much more to the Creator darkness must be as light—for 'God is light, and in him is no darkness at all.' C.

Ver. 13. Reins. The kidneys—called the reins, from the governing and guiding power which the Hebrews attributed to them in the animal and mental economy—were primary parts of the inwards, offered in sacrifice to God. See Le. 3. 4, 10, 15. To 'possess the reins,' therefore, signifies to possess the whole internal powers, as a devoted sacrifice to the divine majesty. C.

Ver. 24. Lead me, &c. Lead me 'in the old way' in which believers have worshipped thee, in spirit and in truth, since the beginning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—In the faith of these things let me always live, and always act, whether in religious or in civil affairs, under the deepest impressions of God's eyes upon me, his perfect knowledge of my heart, my thoughts, and deeds; of his all-filling presence ever with me, to witness, support, or comfort me; of his marvellous formation of me in nature and grace; of his new-covenant marriage to me, and his everlasting redemption of my soul. Let my whole life, night and day, be filled up with precious, fixed, and delightful thoughts concerning these things, and with holy improvements of them. Let me never make the Lord's enemies my intimates. They who hate God hate his name and image wherever it appears. Let me therefore hate the ways of sinners, while I have true love and pity to their souls. And let a thorough cleansing from sin, and progress in holiness, be the earnest desire and ineffable delight of my soul.

PSALM CXL. Ver. 1. 'Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man?' Ac. 8. 34. Let the prayerful inquirer consult Ps. xl., interpreted by He. 10. 5; then compare Ps. 2. 4, interpreted by Ac. 4. 26, with Ps. 59. 8, and consider its prayer for deliverance, compared with the similar prayer of this psalm, see also Ps. xliii. lix. lxiv. lxxi.—and the parallelism, nay the identity of the descriptions and petitions must point to Messiah in the days of his flesh, as the speaker in this psalm. The chief object of the prayer is deliverance from Judas and his employers, the high-priest and Pharisees, and from Antichrist, that wicked one, 2 Th. 2. 8, and his persecuting followers in apostate Babylon. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, as in a glass, how maliciously Jesus Christ was reproached and persecuted; how he gave himself to prayer on account of it; and how the judgment of God overtook his Jewish murderers and persecutors! Let us likewise observe, that sin turns men into a kind of devils, in deceit, malice, and diligence in evil, and in inveterate opposition to the people of God. But the saints may attain, even amidst their troubles, to the most pleasant prayers and praises; for God terribly resents the injuries done to his people; and kindly will he maintain their cause, and for their protection afford them his presence.

PSALM CXLI. REFLECTIONS.—A deep sense of

3 Set[d] a watch, O LORD, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips.

4 Incline[e] not my heart to any evil thing, to practise wicked works with men that work iniquity: [g]and let me not eat of their dainties.[3]

5 [h]Let[4] the righteous smite me;[5] it shall be a kindness: and let him reprove me; it shall be an excellent oil, which shall not break my head: for [i]yet my prayer also shall be in their calamities.

PSALM CXLII.

David showeth that in his trouble all his comfort was in prayer unto God.

Maschil of David;[1] A prayer when he was [a]in the cave.

I CRIED unto[b] the LORD with my voice; with my voice unto the LORD did I make my supplication.

2 I[c] poured out my complaint before him; I showed before him my trouble.

3 When[d] my spirit was overwhelmed within me, then thou knewest my path: in the way wherein I walked [e]have they privily laid a snare for me.

4 I looked on my right hand, and beheld,[2] but[g] there was no man that would know me: refuge failed me;[3] no man cared for my soul.[4]

5 I[h] cried[5] unto thee, O LORD: I said, Thou art my refuge and [i]my portion in the land of the living.

6 Attend unto my cry; for [j]I am brought very low: [k]deliver me from my persecutors; for they are stronger than I.

7 Bring[l] my soul out of prison, that I may praise thy name: [n]the righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt [o]deal bountifully with me.

PSALM CXLIII.

1 David prayeth for favour in judgment. 3 He complaineth of his griefs. 5 He strengtheneth his faith by meditation and prayer. 7 He prayeth for grace, 9 for deliverance, 10 for sanctification, 12 and for the destruction of his enemies.

A psalm of David.

HEAR my[a] prayer, O LORD; give ear to my supplications: [b]in thy faithfulness answer me, and in thy righteousness.[1]

2 And[c] enter not into judgment with thy servant: for [d]in thy sight shall no man living be justified.

3 For[e] the enemy hath persecuted my soul; he hath smitten my life down to the ground; he hath made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead.

4 Therefore[g] is my spirit overwhelmed within me; my heart within me is desolate.

5 I[h] remember the days of old; I meditate on all thy works; I muse on the work of thy hands.

6 I [i]stretch forth my hands unto thee: [j]my soul thirsteth after thee, as a thirsty land. [2]Selah.

7 Hear[k] me speedily, O LORD; my spirit faileth: hide not thy face from me, lest I be[3] like unto them that go down into the pit.

8 Cause[l] me to hear thy loving-kindness in the morning;[4] for in thee do I trust: [m]cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; [o]for I lift up my soul unto thee.

9 Deliver[p] me, O LORD, from mine enemies: [q]I flee unto thee to hide me.[5]

10 Teach[r] me to do thy will; for thou art my God: [s]thy Spirit is good, lead me into the [t]land of uprightness.

11 Quicken[u] me, O LORD, for thy name's sake: [v]for thy righteousness' sake bring my soul out of trouble.

12 And[x] of thy mercy cut off mine [6]enemies, need will make us importunate in prayer for speedy help, gracious acceptance, direction, preservation, and merciful restraints. Faithful and Christian reproof is a necessary and kind office of friendship. And to love reproof, and be thankful for it, is one of the surest symptoms of a gracious heart. But that reproof will be most effectual which comes from those whose unsuspected piety gives weight to their words, and whose tender manner of applying it renders it soft and penetrating. For men to pray to be put right, and yet to be displeased with rebuke for what is wrong, is base dissimulation. Often people never regard God's candidates for the magistracy or ministry, till their own be destroyed or shamefully disgraced. But let the case of the church or saints be ever so deplorable, fervent prayers will soon render it hopeful. And if our eyes be fixed on God, our feet shall not slip. But the destruction of the wicked is determined, and their devices to hurt others shall but hasten their own wretchedness.

PSALM CXLII. Ver. 1. This is a specimen of those 'prayers and supplications, with strong crying and tears,' which Christ offered up 'in the days of his flesh' to 'Him that was able to save him, and was heard in that he feared,' He. 5. 7. If any desire more evidence of Christ speaking in these words, let them examine Ps. xvi. xxxi. xxxiv. lxix., which various quotations in the New Testament have, by the Spirit, interpreted of him; and their parallelism with this psalm must equally assign it to Messiah. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Sore troubles ought to produce fervent prayers. They who have the God of all grace to flee to, may safely leave in his hand all their troubles. And when our consciences condemn us not, then have we confidence before him. We can never be brought so low but God can help us. If men forsake or disregard us, God, as our refuge and portion, will more than balance our want. If we are even fettered in the bands of corruption, temptation, or trouble, he can deliver us. And the mercies which our brethren enjoy should excite our praises, as members of the same body.

PSALM CXLIII. Ver. 2. Christ was not justified, that is, judged in the flesh, and legally pronounced righteous as a living man; but 'he was delivered (that is, to death) for our offences, and raised for our justification,' Ro. 4. 25, being 'put to death in the flesh, and quickened by the Spirit,' 1 Pe. 3. 18; and as Paul expresses it, 'God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit,' 1 Ti. 3. 16. C.

Ver. 10. Teach me. Let it never be forgot, that the Word that was truly God, became as truly flesh; and that Jesus, 'though a Son, learned obedience by the things that he suffered,' He. 5. 8. C.

Ver. 11. Quicken me—'God who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, hath quickened us together with Christ,' Ep. 2. 5. C.

REFLECTIONS.—If ever we hope for God's acceptance of us, it must not be for anything in us, but purely of grace, for his dear Son's sake, according to the promises of his Word. The most righteous cannot bear the severity of God's justice. They who best know their own hearts will ever be the first to condemn themselves, and to cry for mercy at God's hand. And they who plead guilty before the law, and flee to the grace of the gospel in Christ, shall be justified from all things. When our distress is greatest, God's power and grace shall be the more magnified in our deliverance. Though it be hard to exercise courageous faith under sore troubles, yet remembrance of God's kindness, to ourselves or others, in former times, is very encouraging. And they who thirst for his presence, favour, and love, shall never be sent away empty from his throne of grace; whatever manifestations of mercy, direction, instruction, deliverance, guidance, quickenand destroy all them that afflict my soul: [y]for I am thy servant.

PSALM CXLIV.

1 David blesseth God for his mercy both to him and to man. 5 He prayeth that God would powerfully deliver him from his enemies. 9 He promiseth to praise God. 11 He prayeth for the happy state of the kingdom under God's favour.

A psalm of David.[1]

BLESSED be the LORD my strength,[2] which[a] teacheth my hands to war,[3] and my fingers to fight.

2 My[b] goodness,[4] and my fortress; my high tower, and my deliverer; my shield, and he in whom I trust; who subdueth my people under me.

3 LORD,[c] what is man, that thou takest knowledge of him! or the son of man, that thou makest account of him!

4 Man[d] is like to vanity: [e]his days are as a shadow that passeth away.

5 Bow[g] thy heavens, O LORD, and come down: touch the mountains, and they shall smoke.

6 Cast[h] forth lightning, and scatter them:[5] shoot out thine arrows, and destroy them.[6]

7 Send[i] thine hand[7] from above; rid me, and deliver me out of great waters, from the hand of [j]strange children;

8 Whose[k] mouth speaketh vanity; and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.

9 I[l] will sing a new song unto thee, O God: upon a psaltery and an instrument of ten strings will I sing praises unto thee.

10 It[n] is he that giveth salvation[8] unto kings; who delivereth David[9] his servant from the hurtful sword.

11 Rid[o] me, and deliver me from the hand of strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity, and their right hand is a right hand of falsehood:

12 That our sons may be [p]as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as[q] corner-stones, polished[1] after the similitude of a palace;[2]

13 That[r] our garners may be full, affording all manner of store;[3] that our sheep may bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our streets;

14 That our oxen may be strong to labour;[4] that there be no [s]breaking in, nor going out; that there be no complaining in our streets.

1 This psalm is mainly a compilation made, probably by the author himself, from portions of other psalms, and arranged in one complete form for some special purpose. The principal portions of it are found in Ps. 18. 8; xxxiii.civ. The general burden is a prayer to Jehovah for help and deliverance in prospect of some impending danger. It is the song of a warrior; but of one who feels that his courage, his skill, and his physical strength must be sustained by God.—P.

PSALM CXLV.

1 David praiseth God for his fame, 8 for his goodness, 11 for his kingdom, 14 for his providence, 17 and for his saving mercy.

[a]David's psalm of praise.[1]

I WILL [b]extol thee, my God, O King; and I will bless thy name[2] for ever and ever.

2 Every day will I bless thee; and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

3 Great[c] is the LORD, and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable.[3]

4 One[d] generation shall praise thy works to another, and shall declare thy mighty acts.

5 I will speak of the glorious honour of thy majesty, and of thy wondrous works.[4]

6 And men shall speak of the might of thy terrible acts; and I will declare[5] thy greatness.

7 They shall abundantly utter[6] the memory of thy great goodness, and shall sing of thy righteousness.

8 The[e] LORD is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and of great mercy.[7]

9 The[g] LORD is good to all;[8] and his tender mercies are over all his works.[9]

10 All [h]thy works shall praise thee, O LORD; and thy saints shall bless thee.

11 They[i] shall speak of the glory of thy kingdom, and talk of thy power;

12 To make known to the sons of men his mighty acts, and the glorious majesty of his kingdom.

13 Thy[j] kingdom is an everlasting [1]kingdom, and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations.

14 The[k] LORD upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up all those that be bowed down.

15 The[l] eyes of all wait upon thee;[2] and thou givest them their meat in due season.

16 Thou[n] openest thine hand, and satisfiest the desire of every living thing.

18 The[p] LORD is nigh unto all them that call upon him,[4] to all that [q]call upon him in truth.

19 He[r] will fulfil the desire of them that fear him: he also will hear their cry, and will save them.

ing for themselves, and destruction of enemies, they may ask.

PSALM CXLIV. Ver. 1. Teacheth my hands to war—'a good warfare,' 1 Ti. 1. 18, grasping and wielding 'the sword of the Spirit,' Ep. 6. 17; and my fingers to 'fight the good fight of faith,' 1 Ti. 6. 12, directing the arrows of truth to the hearts of the King's enemies, Ps. 45. 5. C.

Ver. 3. On comparing this verse with Ps. 8. 4 and He. 2. 6–9, it will appear that the speaker is Messiah, made a little—rather, for a little—lower than the angels; that for his obedience unto death he might be crowned with glory and honour. C.

Ver. 5. The Lord literally descended upon Mount Sinai, taking upon earth a local habitation, that he might manifest his visible glory, Ex. 19. 18. Here he is represented as causing the heavens to bow to the earth, not in a mere figure, but in a reality—when he shall be 'revealed from heaven in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ,' 2 Th. 1. 8. C.

Ver. 11. A right hand of falsehood. False to every engagement, however solemnly ratified; obliterating their baptism by infidelity, and, in the Lord's supper, eating and drinking to their own condemnation. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold, as in a figure, Jesus Christ, the child of heaven, advanced by his Father to his right hand, and invested with all power in heaven and in earth! There he rejoices in his God, and in his glorious victories of salvation, and makes intercession for the conquest and ruin of all evil, and for the abundant happiness of his people.—Great and blessed is the believer's hope in the divine relations and perfections; and infinite is the condescension and kindness of God towards man: so mean, so unsubstantial, so transitory! Certainly then there shall come a day in which God will redeem his people out of all their deep waters of trouble, and justly reward his and their enemies. O what a mercy is it to receive, out of the hand of a reconciled God, children endowed with every corporeal and mental accomplishment, garners replenished with useful stores, thriving flocks and herds, and a safe and quiet commonwealth! Yet it is not in earthly enjoyments, but in God himself, as our God and our ALL IN ALL, that solid and everlasting happiness consists.

PSALM CXLV. Ver. 1. The speaker engages 'to bless and praise the name of his God and King every day, for ever and ever,' ver. 1, 2. And surely he who knows that every day he will be so able and inclined must be Jesus, 'the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.' C.

Ver. 3. Greatness. From comparing the structure of this psalm with He. 1. 10, it would appear, that in this verse the Father addresses the Son, whose 'mighty works' in creation, providence, and redemption, he expounds and extols before angels and men. Greatness can but be comprehended by viewing works made and upheld, enemies restrained and subdued, and obedient subjects ruled and employed. C.

Ver. 9. Lest any should impiously misinterpret these gracious

20 The[s] LORD preserveth all them that love him: but all the wicked will he destroy.

21 My[t] mouth shall speak the praise of the LORD: and let [u]all flesh bless his holy name for ever and ever.[5]

PSALM CXLVI.

1 The psalmist voweth perpetual praises to God. 3 He exhorteth not to trust in man. 5 God, for his power, justice, mercy, and kingdom, is only worthy to be trusted.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Praise[a] the LORD, O my soul.[2]

2 While[b] I live will I praise the LORD: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being.[3]

3 Put[c] not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help.[4]

4 His[d] breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish.

5 Happy[e] is he that hath the God of Jacob[5] for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God;

6 Which[g] made heaven, and earth, the sea, and all that therein is; [h]which keepeth truth for ever;

7 Which[i] executeth judgment for the oppressed; which [j]giveth food to the hungry. The[k] LORD looseth the prisoners:

8 The[l] LORD openeth the eyes of the blind: the LORD [m]raiseth them that are bowed down: the [o]LORD loveth the righteous:

9 The LORD [p]preserveth the strangers; he relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the [q]way of the wicked he turneth upside down.[7]

10 The[r] LORD shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLVII.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his care of the church, 4 his power, 6 and his mercy: 7 to praise him for his providence: 12 to praise him for his blessings upon the kingdom, 15 for his power over the elements, 19 and for his ordinances in the church.

PRAISE ye the LORD: [a]for it is good to sing praises unto our God; for it is pleasant; and praise is comely.

2 The[b] LORD doth build up Jerusalem: [c]he gathereth together the outcasts of Israel.

3 He[d] healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds.[1]

4 He[e] telleth the number of the stars; he calleth them all by their names.

PSALM CXLVIII.

1 The psalmist exhorteth the celestial, 7 the terrestrial, 11 and the rational creatures, to praise God.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Praise[a] ye the LORD from the heavens: praise him in the heights.

2 Praise[b] ye him, all his angels:[2] praise ye him, all his hosts.[3] words, let it be carefully noted that sin is no work of God—and that where it reigneth unto final impenitence mercy is clean gone, Ps 77.8: 109. 12: He. 10. 28; Ja. 2. 13. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O the infinite greatness, the unbounded grace, and everlasting preciousness of a God in Christ! Happy are they who spend their time and their eternity in the enjoyment and praises of him! How delightful is it to tell our neighbours, to tell our posterity, that which our eyes have seen, and our hearts have believed, concerning this God, who is LOVE; and to tell how this God shall be our God for ever! And it is delightful to behold and praise our exalted Redeemer, who fills heaven and earth with his kindness.

PSALM CXLVI. Ver. 1. The Son, as Prophet of the church, first calls upon all, and then upon that 'reasonable soul' which he took when he 'became flesh' to praise Jehovah, Father, Son, and Spirit. C.

Ver. 9. Strangers. Those who confess that they are 'strangers and pilgrims on the earth,' 'who desire a better country, that is, an heavenly,' He. 11. 13–16. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they whose God is the Lord, and whose praises never end! But the greatest on earth appear as insignificant nothings before God, or even to a gracious heart. Nothing on earth is properly a man's property but his grave. But though in man there be no help, no ground of hope, our God-man is mighty to save; and hope in him knows no disappointment. Be stirred up, therefore, my soul, to depend on him, who is my almighty Maker, my faithful and promise-performing Friend, my kind and righteous Protector, my bountiful Provider, my omnipotent Deliverer, my gracious Enlightener, my seasonable Restorer, my perpetual Preserver, and the just Punisher of all evil—my King, my God, and my ALL.

PSALM CXLVII. Ver. 1. The grammar of the psalm, as seen in the phrase 'our God,' ver. 1, 5, 7, discovers the speaker to be the church in her collective and corporate capacity, calling upon her several members to the delightful work of praise—a work pleasant to the heart of those engaged in it, and comely in the eyes of saints and angels. C.

Ver. 2. The Lord doth build up Jerusalem. All the works ascribed to the Lord, throughout the psalm, are works that he is always doing. Accordingly, after every siege and demolition God, by his providence, immediately proceeded to build up Jerusalem again, his architectural witness to all nations: and 'the outcasts of Israel' he has always continued to gather, temporally, into separate and cohesive communities; and spiritually, into one body and temple in Christ Jesus, Ep. 4. 11–16; 1 Pe. 2. 5. C.

Ver. 13. Bars of thy gates. The principal gates of the spiritual Jerusalem are profession and baptism, Ac. 8. 37, 38: and the principal bars—'trying the spirits,' 1 Jn. 4. 1–3; condemnation of error, 1 Ti. 4. 7; 2 Ti. 2. 16; Tit. 1. 10, 11; avoidance of the abettors of false doctrine and schism, Ro. 16. 17; 1 Th. 3. 6; 1 Ti. 6.3–5; and excluding from church membership the erroneous and profane, 1 Co. 5. 4–13; Tit. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 16. Snow like wool. Not only is water when changed into snow rendered in appearance 'like wool,' but by a wonderful provision in its structure it acts as wool in protecting plants, and even living bodies, from the destructive influence of the cold. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How good and great must God be

5 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for[e] he commanded, and they were created.

6 He[g] hath also stablished them for ever and ever:[4] he hath made a decree which shall not pass.

9 Mountains,[j] and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars;

10 Beasts,[k] and all cattle; creeping things, and flying fowl;[5]

11 Kings[l] of the earth, and all people; princes, and all judges of the earth;

12 Both[n] young men and maidens; old men and children:

13 Let them praise the name of the LORD: for[o] his name alone is excellent;[6] his glory is above the earth and heaven.

14 He[p] also exalteth the horn of his people, the praise of all his saints; even of the children of Israel, a people [q]near unto him. Praise ye the LORD.

PSALM CXLIX.

1 The prophet exhorteth to praise God for his love to the church, 5 and for that power which he hath given to his saints.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Sing[a] unto the LORD a new song,[2] and his praise in the congregation of saints.[3]

PSALM CL.

An exhortation to praise God with all kinds of musical instruments.

PRAISE ye the LORD.[1] Praise[a] God in his sanctuary: praise him in [b]the firmament of his power.[2]

2 Praise him [c]for his mighty acts: praise him according to his excellent greatness.

3 Praise[d] him with the sound of the trumpet:[3] praise him with the psaltery and harp.

4 Praise him with the timbrel and [4]dance: praise him with stringed instruments and organs.

5 Praise[e] him upon the loud cymbals: praise him upon the high-sounding cymbals.

6 Let[g] every thing that hath breath praise the LORD. Praise ye the LORD.

in himself, when his greatness, wisdom, power, and goodness are so manifested in all his works. And when he so observes and provides for all his creatures, how impossible is it that his ransomed children should be overlooked or starved! Much of God is to be seen in all around us—in luminaries, in animals, in crops, in seasons, in human persons or societies; but, above all, in his church and in his word. If these be abused by us, it will be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment than for us.

PSALM CXLVIII. Ver. 1. In the heights. The highest regions of heaven, where the glory of God is most brightly exhibited, and the mysteries of his government—unspeakable in earthly language—are audibly expounded and proclaimed, 2 Co.12.2–4. C.

Ver. 7. Dragons. This word is generally interpreted 'seamonsters'—an unmeaning phrase. The word is generic, and that it sometimes signifies wild beasts seems probable from Mal. 1. 3. That it also is applied to the whale, seems certain from its description as one of the mammalia, La. 4. 3, and from its property of holding its breath and violently emitting it, Je. 14. 6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How great and good must God appear to his people, when their minds are so overcharged with their debt of praise! And indeed, had the praises of God but due room on earth, it would much resemble heaven. But none are more deep in the debt of praise than faithful men; sometime afar off, but now brought near to him by the blood of his Son!

PSALM CXLIX. Ver. 2. Israel. They that have obtained a 'new name,' who wrestle with God in prayer, and prevail, by faith, in the name of Jesus, Ge. 32. 24, 28; Ho. 12. 3, 4; Jn. 14. 13. C.

Ver. 3. Dance. The word translated dance signifies a pipe, or some other fistular instrument of music, and not any mode of marching or saltation. C.

Ver. 6. Two-edged sword. The two-edged sword of the Word—the law of fire and the gospel of grace, Ep. 6. 17; He. 4. 12; De. 33. 2; Ac. 20. 24; Tit. 2. 11. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Behold here Jesus and his gospel church chiefly in her millennial state. He and his people mutually rejoice in one another:—while they praise him, he imparts the blessings of salvation to them; and while he goes forth in his chariots of salvation, conquering sinners by his grace, or in his chariots of judgment, to oppose his Jewish, heathen, and antichristian enemies, by their prayers and influence they work together with him.

PSALM CL. Ver. 1. The first verse marks the place where the Lord is to be praised—the sanctuary on earth, the firmament above. C.

Ver. 2. The second verse assigns reasons for praise—God's mighty acts, and the multitude of his acts. C.

Ver. 3–6. The remaining portion of the psalm calls first upon instruments of every construction, and finally upon everything that breathes, to praise the Lord. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Happy are they who dwell in God's house above—they are always praising him on the highest key! And happy are they who are on the way to it—they have always matter, and often a heart, for praise.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PSALMS.

The Hebrew title of the Book of Psalms is 'Praises;' because the praise of God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor—as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier—constitutes their principal subject. The Greek title, whence our English name, 'Psalms,' is derived from the Septuagint, and describes these sacred compositions as accompanied by musical instruments. And this accompaniment was in accordance with the law of Moses, Le. 23. 24, &c., and the ritual appointed by divine revelation in the days of David and Solomon, 1 Ch. xvi.

But while praise is justly due to God as Creator, Upholder, and Governor of the world, much more is it due to him as Father, Redeemer, and Sanctifier. And as God the Father is made known and glorified by the Son—and as the Spirit glorifies both Father and Son, by taking 'the things of Christ and showing them' to believers—so it was to be expected that Christ, the beloved Son of God, the Messiah, the Saviour of sinners, would furnish the chief subject of praise in the heart and the songs of the church. Accordingly we have seen that the Psalms are full of Christ—the church on earth strictly imitating the church in heaven, in asserting that 'worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing;' and in ascribing 'blessing, and honour, and glory, and power unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb, for ever and ever.'

The Psalms constitute the great storehouse of prayer in every mood and condition of the spirit. 'Is any merry—let him sing psalms.' Is any sad—they will teach him to cry from the depths of affliction. Is any persecuted—they will furnish him with petitions for a refuge and deliverance. Is any in want—they will lead him to the Friend of the poor and needy. Is any in sickness—they will lead him the way to the true Physician. Is any dying and in misery—they will show him the path of life, ending in fulness of joy at the right hand of the Eternal. And all this they do, because they are the spiritual revelations of the 'supplications, strong crying, and tears' of Jesus in the days of his flesh; and therefore furnish to his disciples the model and the material of their prayers of faith.

The writers of some of the Psalms are known, and the Jews enumerate ten. But this is of little importance—for that the author of all was the Spirit of God, we have the fullest evidence. Thus, independently of that heavenly character which bears witness of their heavenly origin—we have, in the New Testament, more frequent attestations of their divine origin, than for any other book of the whole Scripture collection. They are at least fifty times quoted by our Lord or his apostles. And besides furnishing to our Lord the most powerful of his arguments against the unbelieving Jews, they also furnished him the words in which, upon the cross, he both prayed and expired.

According to the Masoretic copies and the Syriac version, the Psalms are divided into five books: the first extending from Ps. i.–xl.—the second from Ps. xli.–lxxii.—the third from Ps. lxxiii.–lxxxix.—the fourth from Ps. xc.–cvi.—and the fifth from Ps. cvii.–cl. The first four of these end with 'Amen and Amen;' the last with 'Hallelujah.' This division was very ancient, as it evidently existed before the Septuagint translation.

Most of the Psalms have titles prefixed, which by some, as ancient traditionary expositions of the contents, are held in high esteem, and considered as endued with a kind of canonical authority. But some of the highest authorities amongst the ancient Christian writers—as Augustine and Theodoret—have freely admitted that these titles have often no relation to the body of the psalm, and seldom contribute anything to the discovery of the meaning. In their great obscurity all are agreed; and conjectural meanings are so various that they cease to be of value. These titles have accordingly been retained, partly out of respect to those that, in any degree, value them; and partly as mere relics of antiquity, esteemed not for any intrinsic worth, but as samples and memorials of the works of other times.

That the Psalms are occasionally prophetical of Christ no Christian can overlook or deny. That but few, however, are thus prophetical of him, has been an opinion extensively circulated and received—the number of such specially prophetic psalms being ordinarily confined to Ps. ii. xvi. xxii. xl. xlv. lxviii. lxxii. lxxxvii. cx. and cxviii. But were the correctness of this meagre enumeration admitted, still the real relation of the Psalms to Christ remains unsettled. For the real question is, not how many psalms are prophetical, but how many are descriptive of Christ, and proved to be descriptive of him, because they apply accurately to him, and however they may be strained by the efforts of 'accommodation,' still utterly refuse to become applicable to any other. Could we conclude with Origen, Chrysostom, Theodoret, Augustine, Ambrose, Euthymius, and others of the ancient Christian writers, that David was the author of all the Psalms—or admitting, as is commonly believed, that other inspired authors wrote a part of the collection—yet could we accurately ascertain how many were composed by David—and it is upon all hands admitted that he composed a large portion—we would then be able, upon David's own authority, or rather upon that of the Spirit speaking by him, greatly to extend, if not to universalize, the prophetic boundaries of the Psalms. For that the psalms written by David himself were prophetic we have David's own authority, which, as Horsley observes, may be allowed to overpower a host of modern expositors. For thus king David at the close of his life describes himself and his sacred songs: 'David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel said, The Spirit of Jehovah spake by me, and his word was my tongue,' 2 Sa. 23. 1, 2. It was the word, therefore, of Jehovah's Spirit which was uttered by David's tongue. But it should seem the Spirit of Jehovah would not be wanting to enable a mere man to make complaint of his own enemies, to describe his own sufferings just as he felt them, and his own escapes just as they happened. But the Spirit of Jehovah described, by David's utterance, what was known to that Spirit only, and that Spirit only could describe. So that if David be allowed to have had any knowledge of the true subject of his own compositions, it was nothing in his own life, but something put into his mind by the Holy Spirit of God; and the misapplication of the Psalms to the literal David has done more mischief than the misapplication of any other parts of the Scriptures among those who profess the belief of the Christian religion. (See Horsley on the Psalms, vol. i. p. 14.) Nor do we hesitate to express our firm conviction, that a right interpretation of the Psalms, whereby Christ is so clearly discovered in his person, his offices, his passion, his victories, his glories, and his judgment, will bring a light, a comfort, and a joy to the heart of the believer, unknown while darkness lay upon this blessed portion of the Sacred Volume. C.

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS,

And the two immediately following, were penned by Solomon, the renowned king of Israel. Its Hebrew name MISCHLIM imports sentences well pressed together, and powerful to command our assent and regulate our conduct. Teaching by such proverbs, or short substantial sentences, was a very ancient, and is a very plain, profitable, and easy method of instruction. These Proverbs of Solomon are not a mere collection of the wise sayings which had been uttered before his time, but are the inspired dictates of the Holy Ghost to him; and are often quoted or alluded to as such in other inspired books. This book comprehends: (1) A preface; consisting of manifold exhortations to the study and improvement of true wisdom, and of warnings to avoid connections or intimacy with wicked persons, whoredom, rash suretiship, sloth, &c. ch. i.–ix. (2) The Proverbs themselves; published from the beginning, x.–xxiv., or copied out by the direction of Hezekiah, xxv.–xxix. (3) The appendix; containing the prophecy of Agur, and the directions of his mother to him, xxx. xxxi. As the Book of Psalms is calculated to make our hearts warm towards God in holy and pious affections, the scope of this is to make our face shine before men in a prudent, discreet, honest, and useful conversation; which is a no less necessary part of religion. And no book in the world, in so small a compass, affords us such a complete body of rules for directing our personal and relative behaviour.

CHAPTER I. Ver. 1. The choice, divine, substantial, instructive, and governing, but sometimes darkly expressed, sentences of the incomparably wise and inspired Solomon. 2. Framed by the Spirit of God to teach men true and solid wisdom in things pertaining to God and their neighbour, to enable them to discern sin and duty, and to receive and profit by whatever good instructions or advices are given them: 3. To incline and persuade them readily to hearken to such instructions as direct them to live in a wise, candid, upright, and virtuous manner; 4. That those who are unskilful, rash, and incautious, may become circumspect, prudent, and discreet in their conduct: 5. And those who are wise in the matters of time and eternity, may become still more wise and prudent; and be able, with great advantage, to govern themselves and others; 6. And be capable of finding out the meaning of the wise, though dark, sayings of God or men, and profitably to apply them to themselves, or explain them to others.—7. It is necessary that every one who desires true wisdom should begin with, and chiefly study, the saving knowledge of God, and live under a holy awe in the love, worship, and service of him; as, without this, all other knowledge is vain and useless; and, for want of it, wicked men, who prefer trifles to things of infinite importance, pour contempt on the wisest instructions that can be given them. 8, 9. And, next to the fear of God, it is necessary, my dear young men, that you reverence, honour, and obey your parents, and gladly receive and earnestly practise their instructions, as things of inestimable value, which will render you more amiable and honourable than all the gay adorning on earth. 10. And, in order to promote the fear of God and regard to parental instructions, see that with the utmost circumspection and earnestness you avoid all unnecessary fellowship with wicked persons, and all hearkening to their flattering enticements. 11–15. If, in the most courteous manner, and by every argument drawn from profound secrecy, sure success, immense profit, and good fellowship, they would seduce you to robbery, or any other wickedness, abhor their counsels and flee from their company: 16. For, being set on mischief themselves, if they once entangle you, they will perpetually hurry you from one horrid crime to another. 17. And while they lay snares for others whom they reckon rash and inconsiderate, themselves, like silly birds, rush into courses, of which the dangerous issue might be easily perceived: 18. And, in the end, all their pains and cunning to undo others bring ruin upon themselves from the hand of God and men: 19. And all unrighteous methods of procuring wealth but issue in the destruction of the procurers.—20–23. While you shun and abhor the enticements of the wicked, listen to the voice of Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, who, in his word and ordinances of the gospel, in the most public, affectionate, earnest, and importunate manner, calls you, however simple, ignorant, foolish, or even scornful, to forsake your wicked courses, and turn to him by faith and repentance, to receive his Spirit, freely given, and believe his words divinely manifested

PALMYRA ROAD—LEADING FROM DAMASCUS TO TADMOR, THE CITY SOLOMON BUILT IN THE DESERT. [PROVERBS, i: 1.]—Solomon inherited from his father David a vast kingdom. His dominion stretched from the river Euphrates to the Mediterranean Sea, south to the river of Egypt, and north to near where the city of Aleppo now stands. Damascus was within his territory, and he built Palmyra, called Tadmor, in his day. This is a city in the wilderness, and that Solomon built it we learn from I. Kings, ix: 18, and II. Chronicles, viii: 4. Tadmor is between the Euphrates and Hamath, and is situated in an oasis of the desert. The celebrated Queen Zenobia had her capital and home in Palmyra. She built up a mighty kingdom which rivaled and defied the Roman power. She was captured and brought to Rome by the emperor Aurelian, A. D. 273. We give here as illustrating this first chapter of Proverbs, written by Solomon, a picture of a road leading out from Damascus to Tadmor, the city he built.

6 To[g] understand a proverb, and the interpretation;[7] the[h] words of the wise, and their dark sayings.

7 ¶ The[i] fear of the LORD is the [8]beginning[9] of knowledge: but fools despise wisdom and instruction.[1]

8 My[j] son, [k]hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother:

9 For[l] they shall be an ornament[2] of grace unto thy head, and chains about thy neck.

10 ¶ My son, [m]if sinners entice thee, consent thou not.

11 If they say, [o]Come with us, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent without cause;

12 Let[p] us swallow them up alive as the grave; and whole, as those that go down into the pit:

13 We[q] shall find all precious substance, we shall fill our houses with spoil:

14 Cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse:

15 My son, [r]walk not thou in the way with them; [s]refrain thy foot from their path:

16 For[t] their feet run to evil, and make haste to shed blood:

17 (Surely[u] in vain the net is spread [3]in the sight of any bird:)[4]

18 And[v] they lay wait for their own blood; they lurk privily for their own lives.[5]

19 So are the ways of every one [x]that is greedy of gain; which taketh away the life of the owners thereof.

20 ¶ Wisdom[6] crieth without; she uttereth her voice in the streets;[7]

21 She crieth in the chief place of concourse, in the openings of the gates: in the city she uttereth her words, saying,

22 How[y] long, ye simple ones,[8] will ye love simplicity? and the scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge?

23 Turn[z] you at my reproof: behold, I [a]will pour out my Spirit unto you, I will make known my words unto you.

24 ¶ Because[b] I have called, and ye refused; I have stretched out my hand, and no man regarded;

25 But ye have set at nought all my counsel, and would none of my reproof:

26 I[c] also will laugh at your calamity; I will mock when your fear cometh.

27 When[d] your fear cometh as desolation, and your destruction cometh as a whirlwind; when distress and anguish cometh upon you:

28 Then[e] shall they call upon me, but I will not answer; they shall seek me early, but they shall not find me:

29 For[g] that they hated knowledge, and did not choose the fear of the LORD:

30 They[h] would none of my counsel; [i]they despised all my reproof:

31 Therefore[j] shall they eat of the fruit of their own way, and be filled with their own [9]devices.

32 For[k] the turning away[1] of the simple shall slay them, and the prosperity of fools shall destroy them.

33 But[l] whoso hearkeneth unto me shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil.

9 The direct declarations of the Spirit of God in this passage fully accord with the facts of history. The Jewish nation is a sufficient proof. They rejected and despised the divine counsels and warnings for centuries; but at length judgment came. It should be observed also that the teaching of the New Testament is in this in entire harmony with that of the Old. Witness our Lord's judgments on Chorazin, Bethsaida, and Capernaum, and Paul's sweeping statement in Ro. 1. 28—'And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind.'—P.

unto you. 24–29. But in the most solemn manner he warns you, that if you persist in despising his gracious calls, instructions, and offers, his righteous judgment shall overtake and ruin you and your nation, in the most unexpected, fearful, complete, and remediless manner; —and that, while your most rueful cries for deliverance shall be disregarded, your own counsels and contrivances shall render you inexpressibly miserable, and your occasional escapes, and even prosperity, shall, by encouraging your folly, pride, and wickedness, prove means of hastening and aggravating your ruin; 33. While they who hearken to his instructions, and believe on his name, shall, by his watchful providence, be marvellously protected, comforted, and eternally saved.

Ver. 1. The Hebrew word rendered 'proverb,' literally signifies 'likeness' or 'comparison.' It originally involved, therefore, the idea of a simile, but it had given to it at an early period a wider signification. It came to denote 'such short, pointed sayings, as do not involve a comparison directly, but still convey their meaning by the help of a figure. From this stage of its application it passed to sententious maxims generally, many of which, however, still involve a comparison. Such comparisons are either expressed, or the things compared are placed side by side, and the comparison left for the hearer or reader to supply. Next we find it used of those longer pieces in which a single idea is no longer exhausted in a sentence, but forms the germ of the whole, and is worked out into a didactic poem. Many instances of this kind occur in the first section of the Book of Proverbs.' The title therefore which is here given by the author or compiler to the whole of this book is appropriate, expressing very well its general character. P.

Ver. 2–4 form a general introduction to the whole book, explaining briefly its nature, and stating its object. The object was, to impart wisdom, not merely theoretical, but practical; such wisdom, in fact, as will enable man to understand what he is himself, what God is, what he owes to God, what is necessary for his salvation, and how he is to live, and speak, and think in the world. P.

Ver. 5. A wise man will hear. Right hearing is the great mark and duty of God's children. It is the great remedy against idolatry: 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord,' De. 6. 4. It is the special claim of Jesus: He that hath ears to hear, let him hear,' Mat. 13. 9. It is the special claim of the Spirit: 'Let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches,' Re. xxvii. It is the great principle of the spiritual life: 'Hear, and your soul shall live,' Is. 55. 3. It is the great channel of faith: 'Faith cometh by hearing,' Ro. 10. 17. C.

Ver. 7. The fear of the Lord. 'Doth not perfect love cast out fear?' True, but not the fear of God. It casteth out the fear of condemnation, Ro. 8. 1; it triumphs over the fear of death, 1 Co. 15. 57; but it implants and cherishes the fear of reverence for the majesty, the holiness, and the mercy of God. C.

Ver. 11. Innocent. The sinners do not call their contemplated victims innocent in the sense of guiltless, for that would detract from their enticement; they call them innocent in the sense of simple, unwarlike.—Without cause. Whose religion, instead of bringing safety and profit, renders them an easy prey. The speech of the bandits of the desert preparing to watch and plunder the caravans; the principle of avarice stimulating to dishonesty and cruelty in every form and in every generation. O believer, beware of covetousness, and be content with such things as thou hast, Lu. 12. 15. C.

Ver. 18. Robbery generally leads to murder, and experience proves that murderers seldom escape undetected and unpunished; so that the plotter against his neighbour is really ensnaring himself, and toiling for his own ruin. C.

Ver. 23. I will pour out my Spirit. Christ, 'in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge,' Col. 2. 3, here promises to pour out that Spirit which alone can make the letter of the word effectual, and the soul wise to salvation. C.

Ver. 26. How can a merciful Saviour thus 'laugh and mock' at the 'calamity and fear' of sinners? Just because they are still impenitent sinners. The devil is even now as much a 'liar and a murderer' as he was in the beginning of his rebellion, and his hosts 'believe and tremble,' but they never desire to love. Even so, the 'carnal mind' abideth 'enmity against God,' and hates the Judge while it writhes beneath the judgment. C.

Ver. 32. Turning away of the simple, &c. 'The turning away' to worldly ease, carnal indulgence, and spiritual sleep.—Prosperity of fools, &c. Because they think not of death, of judgment, of eternity; and are promising ease to their bodies, till their souls are demanded of them.—Note, Rebel not in adversity, for 'whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—The inspired oracles of God are calculated to convey the most solid and precious instruction in the things both of time and eternity: and it is necessary and profitable that all, even the wisest, should carefully search them, particularly in the days of youth, in which the faculties are most quick, the temptations most numerous, and our conversation, for time and eternity, just forming. Deep regard to God and to parental admonitions are highly necessary in those who desire true wisdom. But there can be no solid knowledge or prudence where the heart is not changed, believes not on Christ, and loves not God as in him. With amazing earnestness and craft do sinners seduce others, particularly young and simple ones, into fellowship with them in sin. It is necessary, therefore, to be always impressed with the awe of God's omniscience and just judgment, that no temptation of secrecy or of gain may tempt us to wickedness: and to avoid the society of the wicked if we choose to escape their ruin. But with what infatuation do men, more stupid than birds, rush into danger when fairly warned! and in ruining others, they but ruin themselves in a more miserable manner: and however secrecy or power may protect them from men, the judgment of God overtakes them. Their cruelty and avarice hurry them and their companions into lasting misery and woe. Alas! how great is their folly, who, for a perishing world, destroy an immortal soul; and for a momentary pleasure, plunge themselves into everlasting woe! But great is the compassion of Jesus to such rebellious sinners: in the most earnest and open manner he pleads with them, in the ordinances of his grace, to promote their eternal salvation. Condescending are his offers and invitations of mercy, pointed to the most unworthy and wicked; and precious and necessary the benefits which he offers. But inexcusable is their guilt, and dreadful their ruin, who obstinately refuse them. Rejected of God in their misery, even their ease and prosperity harden and ensnare them, and aggravate their woe! But blessed above all with salvation and rest are those who receive them, and listen to his gracious voice.

CHAPTER II.

1 The study of wisdom tendeth to promote godliness, 10 and safety from evil company, 20 and to direct men in good and salutary ways.

MY son, [a]if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandments with thee;

2 So that [b]thou incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding;

3 Yea, [c]if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice[1] for understanding;

4 If[d] thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures;

5 Then[e] shalt thou understand the fear of the LORD, and find the knowledge of God.

6 For[g] the LORD giveth wisdom: out of his mouth cometh knowledge and understanding.

7 He layeth up [h]sound wisdom for the righteous: he is a [i]buckler to them that walk uprightly.

8 He [j]keepeth the paths of judgment, and preserveth the way of his saints.

9 Then[k] shalt thou understand righteousness, and judgment, and equity; yea, every good path.[2]

10 ¶ When[l] wisdom entereth into thine heart, and knowledge is pleasant unto thy soul,

11 Discretion[m] shall preserve thee, understanding shall keep thee;

12 To[o] deliver thee from the way of the evil man, from the man that speaketh[p] froward things;

13 Who[q] leave the paths of uprightness, to walk in the ways of darkness;

14 Who[r] rejoice to do evil, and delight in the frowardness of the wicked;

2 This verse is more immediately connected with ver. 5, and follows, like the latter, as a result of the diligent search after wisdom. Righteousness is that adherence to strict law and justice which characterizes every act of God's government, and ought to characterize the doings of his people. Judgment embraces those punishments inflicted upon sinners, and those judicial acts done in vindication of the divine character, and in defence and for the promotion of God's kingdom. Equity embraces the whole scheme of redemption and of grace, with the whole sphere of Christian work and duty.—P.

3 What profundity of wisdom is requisite to guard the intellect, the heart, and the senses against the various forms of temptation! False philosophy assails us with its insidious but superficial speculations. Malice and envy and slander assail us, trying our tempers, and going far to ruin our influence. Pleasure, wealth, fame assail us, and in their train follow lust and passion. Divine wisdom alone, aided by divine grace, can enable weak mortals to resist and overcome all their enemies.—P.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1–5. And for your excitement and encouragement, know assuredly, my children, that if you entertain, receive, and lay up in your heart the instructions and directions which I now give you; if you earnestly study, and importunately pray for, the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and of all true and spiritual wisdom and knowledge in him, as infinitely more precious, useful, and desirable than all the treasures on earth, then you shall, by the influences of the Holy Spirit, happily obtain your desire, and be enabled and directed to know, obey, fear, love, worship, and serve God in a proper and truly acceptable manner. 6–9. For as wisdom and every other blessing is the free gift of God, he in his Word hath revealed, and by his Spirit bestows it upon men, and gives them a true and spiritual knowledge of himself and his ways. He hath in store, and is always ready to bestow upon such as ask it, true, solid, and substantial wisdom. And while he instructs and directs, he, by his almighty providence, infallibly preserves from soul-ruining mischiefs such as walk in a sincere, candid, and upright manner. He guides and enables the lovers of holiness to persevere in their integrity according to the rules of his Word, and preserves them from being drawn aside from it or endangered in it. And in seeking wisdom from him, you shall come to understand his righteousness and wisdom in all his administrations, and be enabled to imitate him in everything truly holy and virtuous. 10. And if Jesus Christ, the spiritual knowledge of divine things, and the power of practical godliness, have once been admitted to your heart and into your affections, 11-15. These will tend to preserve you from the crafty and ruinous seduction, either of subtle men, who, having apostatized from everything good, walk and delight in the perplexed ways of vice, and in making others as wicked as themselves, drawing them aside, and entangling them in courses directly contrary to their own true interest, safety, conscience, or reason; 16. Or of light and lewd women, unworthy to be reckoned Israelites, who set themselves, by all the arts of flattery, to decoy such as you into whoredom; 17. Perfidiously alienating their affections and persons from their own husbands, and disregarding the solemn vows made to them at marriage; 18. And who really love no one, but promote the death and eternal damnation of all such as cultivate any familiarity with them. 19. Very few who are once ensnared into their impure embraces are ever, by the grace of God, recovered to a penitent, chaste, and virtuous life on earth, or to everlasting glory in heaven.—20–22. And, moreover, while you are preserved from the ruinous infection of these wicked seducers, you shall be enabled to follow the example of the holy patriarchs and prophets; and, in consequence of this, shall happily dwell in this promised land of Canaan, and inherit the spiritual and everlasting felicity prefigured by it.—While these wicked seducers and their followers shall, after a short-lived flourish of prosperity, be furiously driven from this land and earth, and cast into the woe and depths of hell.

Ver. 4. Pearls are brought up from the depths of the sea; gold is washed from the earth and sands; silver is dug from the deep and dark mine; gems are extricated from the solid rock; the relics of antiquity are separated from rubbish and ruins—and shall the unsearchable riches of Christ be expected on the surface, as the reward of the indolent, or the discovery of accident? No. The believer searches in study of the Word, in study of the ways of Providence, in study of his own heart, in the depths of sovereign grace and eternal love—and discovers those treasures that lie hid from the wise and prudent, but which God by his Spirit reveals unto babes. C.

Ver. 9. Understand righteousness. It should never be forgotten that there is but one righteousness that can ever be discovered, 'the righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Ro. 3. 10, 22. C.

Ver. 12. Men, evil in heart and froward in speech; for in the heart originate all evil things, and out of the abundance of an evil heart the mouth speaketh, Mat. 12. 34. C.

Ver. 17. A woman who has violated her marriage vow is here exhibited. Faithless to God, faithless to man—the perjured wanton is at once the original and the emblem of all that is most seductive, dangerous, and deadly. But to view the passage as a mere warning against a wicked woman, were to narrow it far within the limits of its full meaning. She is the emblem of that heathen idolatry by which the spirit is seduced from God, and immersed in sensuality; and she is the emblem of that seductive apostasy in the nominal Christian church which is called Babylon —with whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, and whose judgment, though it linger, will come in one hour, Re. 18. 9, 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—With remarkable diligence should we attend to all the exercises of true religion. The Lord is ready to bless such as are diligent with great success; and usually bestows upon them remarkable instruction, satisfaction, and protection. There is need of real religion to season and rule our heart; and of God's special preservation and our utmost caution while we live in this world, where men of corrupt principles, and women of treacherous and corrupt practices, so greatly abound. In their sinful courses such are generally obstinate, active, and crafty. Ensnaring are their enticements, and dangerous and ordinarily ruinous their connections: and few, once entangled in their wickedness, ever seriously repent, or turn to Jesus Christ for life and salvation. Happy then are they who are delivered from them, and enabled to walk as truly pious and circumspect. Godliness has the promise of this life and of that which is to come. Even now the saints alone have a blessed portion on earth; and at last they only shall inhabit the new earth, into which no wicked person shall ever enter.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1, 2. Let me therefore again entreat you, my dear children, to receive, and rivet in your judgment, memory, will, and affections, the counsels and commands which I now give, that you may practise them in your lives: thus shall your temporal life be long, healthful, and prosperous; be attended with a pleasant life of grace here, and followed by an eternal life of glory hereafter. 3, 4. And while you live by a cordial, constant, and assured faith in the mercy and faithfulness of God, pledged in his Word, study always, as your great honour, to imitate him in kindness, compassion, and uprightness: thus shall you be highly respected and honoured, and shall prudently order your affairs both before God and men. 5, 6. Always, by faith in his spiritual promises and relations, depend wholly on God for strength, direction, and success in your undertakings, and never upon your own knowledge or carnal prudence. In every undertaking believe and depend on his overruling power, observe his directions, and implore and wait for his favour and blessing, and he shall guide you in all your proceedings, and bring them to a happy issue. 7, 8. Never indulge a conceit of your own knowledge or wisdom, as if it were sufficient to direct you in the easiest matters: but under the influence of a holy and filial awe of and regard to God, avoid with care whatever he has forbidden in his law: as that is the way to promote the health, strength, and comfort of both soul and body in time and eternity. 9, 10. In just gratitude to God, who has bestowed all that you have upon you, make conscience of employing your estates in works of piety, for the maintenance of his worship, and of charity to his poor, and of justice to all men: so shall his blessing abundantly increase them in everything useful and comfortable. 11, 12. Never overlook or contemn the afflictions which you meet with, as if they were trifles, or happened by chance; and never grow weary of them as an intolerable burden, or take any unlawful course to remove them; but kindly receive and submit to them as the corrections of a kind and gracious Father, in which he manifests his distinguished love to and care for your souls.—13–18. Thrice happy is the man who through much tribulation, and with much care and pains, obtains the enjoyment of Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that is in and by him. This is infinitely preferable to everything gainful, comely, precious, or profitable on earth. By this we are secured in all the real blessings of this present life and of that which is to come. In cleaving to Jesus, and walking in his ordinances and laws, the most delightful comforts and pleasures, the most blessed tranquillity of mind and conscience, the most happy success of affairs, and eternal rest with God in glory, are to be enjoyed.—Immortal, quickening, and invigorating is the satisfaction enjoyed by every one who earnestly embraces his person, receives his instructions, and steadfastly walks in his ways. 19, 20. And no wonder that Jesus Christ, and the spiritual wisdom and knowledge that are hid in him, should be so profitable, pleasant, and comfortable, when by him, and in the exercise of his infinite wisdom, God formed, founded, and settled the heavens, and earth, and seas, and all that is therein, and makes the fountains to pour forth streams for the nourishment of animals, and the clouds to drop down dews and rains for the nourishment of plants, corn, and grass.—21–26. Be it therefore your earnest care to fix these my instructions in your heart, and to keep them always before your eyes, as the means of obtaining true and profitable knowledge and prudence. You will find them infallible promoters of true life, and honour, and comfort, temporal, spiritual, and eternal. By means hereof, you, by the blessing of God, shall prosper in your labours, and be kept from falling into sin or danger; and under his protection you shall enjoy the most safe and pleasant rest and refreshment. No reports of sudden and approaching danger, or of desolating judgments, appointed for or effected by the wicked, need in the least terrify you; for the Almighty JEHOVAH, in whom you have placed all your trust and confidence, shall support, protect, and preserve you from danger. 27, 28. Never delay the payment of just debts, or the giving to the Lord, or to the poor, beyond the first opportunity afforded you, as you know not if ever Providence will give you another. 29. Never contrive mischief against any: especially against such as depend on your equity and kindness. 30. Never be quarrelsome and contentious: and especially to such as have done you no injury. 31, 32. Never let the prosperity and wealth of oppressors tempt you to wish yourselves in their condition, or to imitate them in their injurious conduct; for wilful and obstinate oppressors are infinitely detested and hated of God; but his secret counsels and comforts are vouchsafed to such as walk uprightly and honestly. 33. Evil-doers, however great, and all that they have, are under the destructive influence of God's curse; but good men, being under the influence of his favour and blessing, may be happy in the meanest condition upon earth. 34. God will certainly at last expose proud mockers of religion and virtue to scorn and contempt; but will render such as are meek and humble highly respected and honoured. 35. And though persons truly wise unto salvation may for a time be abusively reproached and contemned, yet they shall, in the most free and fixed manner, enjoy honour from God and men at last; whereas contempt and misery are all the promotion that wicked men, ignorant of God and regardless of their true interest, shall ever attain.

5 ¶ Trust[h] in the LORD with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding.

9 ¶ Honour[l] the LORD with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of all thine increase:

Ver. 2. The fifth is the first commandment with promise; which ever in this life receives a literal fulfilment, as far as it serves for God's glory and the good of his people: also a spiritual fulfilment; for believers always count their days by the continuance of goodness and mercy; and their life has become truly long from their 'desire to depart and be with Christ.' But hereafter the promise is fully realized in all the blessings of life and immortality. C.

Ver. 5. Trust in the Lord. Trust in the Lord's word, whatever hath been thy own previous opinion; trust in his will, whatever hath been thy previous inclinations; trust in his promise, whatever hath been thy own previous experience; and trust in his guidance, whatever may be thy doubts, difficulties, or fears. C.

Ver. 16. Some think this description of temporal blessings is confined to the Jewish, and not literally extended to the Christian dispensation. This, with the exception of the promise of possessing Canaan, is an unfounded distinction; 'for godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life that now is,' 1 Ti. 4. 8. The true meaning of the verse lies in referring its promise to the gift of eternal life, and the acquisition of the 'unsearchable riches of Christ.' C.

Ver. 17. Ways of pleasantness. A way is rendered pleasant, (1) by health to journey and enjoy; (2) by the smoothness of the path; (3) by the beauty of the prospect; (4) by the safety of the country; (5) by the agreeableness of companions; (6) by the prospect of a cheerful and happy rest and welcome at the end: all these meet when Jesus is 'the way.' C.

Ver. 22. Life unto thy soul. The life of the body is supported by food, digestion, and nutrition, which eventuate in health and enjoyment. The life of the soul is supported by the bread that cometh down from heaven; is accompanied with 'hunger and thirst after righteousness,' which is followed by 'growth in grace,' and eventuates in 'the peace of God' with 'joy unspeakable and full of glory.' C.

Ver. 25. Be not afraid of sudden fear. 'Sudden fear,' or what is commonly called a panic, with 'rumours of wars,' 'dire portents and omens,' are continually disturbing the minds of men. But by all, the believer in Jesus remains unmoved. His Redeemer liveth—his sins are forgiven—he is accepted of God—he inherits the promises—Jesus is with him in the ship, and he trembles not in any storm that his Father may commission to try his faith. C.

Ver. 32. His secret is with the righteous. This does not signify any secret information that God gives to the one, while he withholds it from the other (for the grace of God hath appeared unto all men, teaching them that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, they should live soberly, righteously, and godly); but it signifies God's residence in the hearts of believers, which this world can neither see, imagine, nor admit; and that secret comfort which he administers to them by his promises and Spirit, in the midst of all the public trials of which they are partakers, and of the wicked: but [r]he blesseth the habitation of the just.

34 Surely[s] he scorneth the scorners: but he giveth grace unto the lowly.

35 The[t] wise shall inherit glory: but shame shall be the promotion of fools.[9]

REFLECTIONS.—Real religion has a glorious and blessed tendency to render men happy in themselves, and blessings to all around them. And those who neglect and despise it are in general mean-spirited, foolish, and self-ruining wretches, dishonourers of God, and plagues to mankind. But great is the shame that the professors of religion so little conform their lives to the excellent rules thereof, that they so little exemplify them in their behaviour and conduct. And comely would the church of God appear if that regard to God's law, faith in him, devotion, resignation to his will, diligence in his work, and that truth, mercy, equity, peacefulness, humility, and prudence towards men, required in his Word, were duly exercised.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–3. My dear young friends, attend to and receive these affectionate, wholesome, and profitable instructions which I give you: and while you live, earnestly practise the same. They are the very same which I myself, as a darling son, and intended successor on the throne, received from my pious and affectionate father David. 4–9. He, in the most careful and earnest manner, instructed me in my childhood, and begged me to fix his instructions and directions in my heart, and practise them in my life, as the means of attaining true and lasting felicity. He earnestly recommended to me the getting of Jesus Christ, and the true knowledge and fear of God in him, and cleaving thereto, as the grand and effectual means of preservation from sin and danger, and of obtaining happiness and honour both in time and eternity.* 10–13. As you wish to live long and prosperously, receive, and observe in your practice, these my instructions. I do not direct you into paths of folly, fraud, or perverseness, but into a course of wisdom, integrity, and virtue; in which you may prosecute business without any entangling difficulties, and with ease, despatch, and certain success. Carefully fix these instructions in your mind and heart, and persevere in the practice of them, as on this your happiness in time and eternity depends. 14–19. With the utmost care and abhorrence avoid the company and course of wicked men, and every temptation thereto; and with the greatest speed and earnestness flee from it if you have been entangled; for such is the malignity of their dispositions, that they can take no rest till they execute their villanous intentions, and are perpetually disturbing themselves in order to ruin others. They neither have, nor desire, any other provision to live on than what they get by unjust and violent courses. And while good men daily grow in knowledge, grace, and holiness of conversation, till they arrive at perfection, wicked men, amidst gross ignorance, error, confusion, crimes, and wretchedness, rush on heedlessly till they are plunged into everlasting misery. 20–27. And in order to retain in heart, and practise in life, these my excellent instructions, which are a source of lasting and complete happiness to all who improve them aright, watch over your heart, and keep your mind, conscience, will, affections, thoughts, and desires, with uncommon earnestness, as from these do originally issue the eternal happiness or misery of mankind. Resolutely shun all impure or wicked discourse; and never let any corrupt, false, filthy, idle, passionate, or scornful communication proceed from your lips. Let your mind and thoughts be fixed only upon the right paths of holiness and virtue, that you may walk in them without ever turning from them; and never let your eyes, by fixing on improper objects, seduce you into sin or danger. Before you fix upon any action, carefully examine whether it be agreeable to God's law, and answerable to the end for which you intend it; and let every step you take in life be rightly ordered, according to the rule of his Word. And, by shunning extremes on every hand, labour to avoid everything offensive or injurious either to God or men.

* Whether David's words end here, or reach farther, perhaps to the end of chap. ix., we do not certainly know.

Ver. 18. Even the private path of the just (the believer justified by faith, Ro. iii.) is as the shining light. It shineth more and more before God, in faith and love; more and more before men, in diligence and zeal; more and more before the church, in knowledge and edification; more and more before God, in humility and holiness. C.

Ver. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence. Keep it with the diligence of a guardian, that would fence it against intrusion or assault; with the diligence of a servant, that would attend to its necessities and requirements; with the diligence of a steward, keeping all accounts of expenditure and gain; and with the diligence of a physician, attending to its symptoms, and prescribing for its diseases; and with the diligence of a friend, taking equal pleasure in bearing with its infirmities, sympathizing with its sorrows, relieving its necessities, and participating in its joys. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is the greatest honour, as well as duty, of parents carefully to instruct their children: and it may be infinitely useful after both instructors and instructed are laid in the dust. Unspeakably excellent is Jesus Christ, his grace, and holy religion. Multitudes of powerful reasons engage us to remember and cleave to them: and to love, delight in, or exalt them. Yet how apt are our corrupt hearts to ensnare us into

CHAPTER VI.

1 Against suretiship, 6 idleness, 12 and mischievousness. 16 Seven things hateful to God. 20 The blessings of obedience to parents. 25 The mischiefs of whoredom.

MY son, [a]if thou be surety for thy friend, if thou hast stricken thy hand with a stranger, fellowship with wicked persons or practices, or even to render us intent on, and delighted in, the most cruel and barbarous conduct! But wide is the difference in time, and especially in eternity, between the way of holiness and that of iniquity. While the saints gradually grow up in grace here, and live in endless felicity hereafter, the wicked blindly rush forward into everlasting misery. Great circumspection, care, diligence, and watchfulness are therefore necessary in denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, and in living soberly, righteously, and godly in this present evil world.

2 Thou art snared with the words of thy mouth, thou art taken with the words of thy mouth.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1, 2. And, my children, what I am just going to say requires your particular and most serious consideration, that you may be able to preserve yourselves from the most subtle and dangerous deceits, and, by your pious and prudent discourses and admonitions, prevent the ensnarement of others. 3–6. For, astonishing are the arts, and inconceivable the enchanting flatteries, of whorish women, as if nothing but the most pure and exquisite pleasures were to be enjoyed in fellowship with them: but dreadful is the real issue thereof, in the impairing of men's health, strength, estates, and reputation; and in remorse of conscience, wretched death, and endless damnation. And to prevent your repentance and escape from their snares, they will turn themselves into ten thousand forms, that they may work on your several humours. 7–14. Let me, therefore, with the utmost affection, earnestness, and solemnity, beseech you to avoid such women, and all, even the most distant, approaches to familiarity with them, as a dangerous, an infernal plague; lest you forfeit your credit, and sacrifice your vigour of life to base and cruel wretches, who labour to ruin you to every intent, and for ever; and lest your wealth, and the fruit of your care and labour, should by their means be transferred from you to others; and when your substance is gone, and your body pining to death, under horrible diseases, you should have nothing left you but inexpressible torment of conscience, reflecting upon the faithful admonitions of parents and teachers which you have contemned, and the miseries you do, and must for ever, undergo. 15–19. And to prevent your having the smallest inclination to the base and polluting pleasures of whoredom, marry; and in a wife, wholly your own, enjoy and rest contented with the pure, chaste, and honourable pleasures of the marriage state. Take pleasure in having children by her, sporting in the streets, or dispersed into families. Have children by her alone, and which you are sufficiently certain are really your own. Make your wife happy, by an affectionate cleaving to her only: and take pleasure in her innocent and delightful company. While you live together, let her always be amiable in your eyes; cherish her with the most tender affection; and in her embraces, and tender regard, always take such satisfaction as to prevent your affections in the least fixing upon another in her stead. 20, 21. And when you can so fully, pleasantly, securely, constantly, innocently, and honourably enjoy such pleasures in a pious and affectionate wife, why risk everything dear, to enjoy the base, dishonourable, destructive, and damning pleasures of whoredom—especially when the all-seeing God witnesses your most secret conduct, and will quickly reward or punish you according to the nature of it? 22, 23. Nor shall whoremongers and adulterers long escape his insupportable justice;—their own guilt and lust shall for ever bind and hold them fast under the power of his wrath. To punish their contempt of former instructions and warnings, God shall abandon them to impenitence, and permit them madly to rush forward, through increasing crimes, into endless damnation.

Ver. 2. Knowledge. The knowledge of the evil of sin in time and eternity; the knowledge of God in Christ, reconciling the world to himself; the knowledge of regeneration, whereby men are renewed in heart, speech, and behaviour; the knowledge of glory, into which fornicators and adulterers can never enter. C.

Ver. 6. Movable. Like the shifting sands at the estuary of rivers, that move in a storm, and destroy many vessels before their new positions can be sufficiently ascertained. But let it never be forgot, that whilst this wicked and seducing woman is a real character, she is also an emblem of heathen idolatry and Christian apostasy; that like her, lead the soul away from God, and promising life, lead down to the ways of destruction and death. See note on ch. 2. 17. C.

Ver. 19. The loving hind and pleasant roe. The affection of many quadrupeds and birds—nay, of some animals of the deep—for their young, presents an instructive lesson, and often a killing reproof, to rational, immortal, and accountable beings. But however great the evil and the shame, when human beings become unfaithful to one another—how much greater when the harlotry of error seduces the church from her Saviour—when 'the ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib, but Israel doth not know, God's people do not consider?' Is. 1. 3. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is shameful and shocking that mankind should be inclined, nay, so much inclined, to a sin so base, so beastly, and ruinous, as whoredom.—That even in the sex where modesty ought to shine with distinguished lustre, wretches should be found who impudently entice to it! Surely it must be very absurd to prefer the pleasures of it, attended with miseries innumerable, to the innocent, the sanctified joys and honours of the marriage state! But no wonder that they who atheistically discredit the omniscience and justice of God, and live thoughtless of their future account, should proceed to the most infamous lengths in wickedness. Yet let them remember, that in the most miserable manner, correspondent to their sins, they shall at last be hurried into endless fire!

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 1–5. And that no occasion may be given for family contentions or ruin, let me admonish you to beware of all rash engagements in suretiship, especially for such whose honesty or ability you know not; but if you have rashly entangled and enslaved yourself by such obligations, endeavour, as quickly as possible, by every humble and persuasive method you can think of; nay, struggle as for life, to disengage yourself, by pressing the debtor to pay what he owes, or the creditor to acquit you of your bond.—6–11. Meanwhile, never indulge yourself in sloth, and want of provident care; but learn, from those puny insects the ants, to labour diligently in your calling, and carefully improve every opportunity of honestly providing for yourself and your family: and remember that, if that inclination to idleness and sloth, so common to mankind, be indulged by you, whether in greater or smaller degrees, unexpected and at last extreme poverty shall irresistibly come upon you.—12–15. Remember too, that it is the property of persons vile and wicked to accustom themselves to profane, blasphemous, proud, passionate, lewd, or reproachful discourse, or by signs made with their eyes, feet, or fingers to stir up others to mischief. The heart of such being filled with perverse inclinations, they are perpetually contriving mischief, and stirring up hatred and contention among their neighbours: but suddenly shall their villany and wickedness issue in their irretrievable infamy and ruin. 16–19. And indeed proud looks, lying tongues, murderous hands, hearts given to mischievous contrivances, feet given to a speedy execution of injurious designs, perjured persons, and sowers of discord among friends or neighbours, are distinguished objects of God's indignation.—20–22. Let me therefore again press you to attend to, highly esteem, and carefully practise, those divine instructions which have been tendered to you by your parents. This will be of great use to direct, preserve, and comfort you in your whole labours of life. 23, 24. For the law of God, as a lamp, guides in adversity, and, as the light of the sun, directs and comforts in prosperity; and the reproofs of his Word are excellent means of preserving from ruin, and leading to true happiness; and are particularly useful to preserve from being deluded by the flattering speeches and enticements of lewd women, those sinks of wickedness and plagues of mankind. 25–29. As you regard your temporal or eternal welfare, never gaze on the beauty or fine attire of such: never let their wanton and enticing looks engage you to the most distant desire after their dangerous embraces; for if once they insnare you, they will never quit their hold till they have reduced you to extreme beggary, or to a miserable and ignominious death. You may more safely take fire into your bosom, or walk upon burning coals, than intermeddle, however privately or transiently, with a whorish woman, particularly if either party be married. 30–33. If one merely steal to fill his hungry belly, he is not exposed to shame or punishment; and if it be found that he has stolen more, it is only required that he should make complete restitution according to the law, which may perhaps amount to all that he is worth. But he who commits adultery with a woman can have no necessity for it, but acts through mere folly and wickedness, and so exposes himself to the loss of his life by the magistrates, as well as to eternal damnation from the hand of God. He exposes himself to bloody quarrels, and renders himself irrecoverably infamous. And though the civil magistrate should wickedly spare his life, yet it is exposed to the fury of a justly enraged husband, who will regard no penitential submissions or entreaties, and accept no gifts as the ransom of it.

Ver. 1. This is a passage of great practical difficulty. Does it, by implication, altogether forbid the aid of suretiship to friends? This cannot be; for in many instances such suretiship is indispensable. Does it, then, covertly condemn merely such 'rash and inconsiderate engagements as arise from an undue facility of temper, rather than from a deliberate calculation of duty?' Such covert insinuation of a principle is inconsistent with the plainness of Scripture. With great deference, the following slight and well warranted change in the translation is suggested:—'My son, if thou be surety to thy friend,' see Ge. 24. 54. This makes the object of the passage to be a warning against any neglect of a friend's interest (for which we have become accountable), from any undue presumptuous draft upon his friendship—a most necessary warning; for in practice there are many who will neglect their own interests, and the interests of their best friends, for the éclat that may result from their attention and liberality to strangers. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Greatly advantageous, even to the outward interests of persons, families, and nations, is an exact obedience to God's commandments. And it is sinful and foolish to ruin our estates or families by engaging for other people's debts: but infamously wicked are those debtors who exert not themselves to the utmost to relieve their sureties. Great care ought to be taken of our outward property. In respect of it we are but God's stewards, and ought to lay it out and bring it in according to his directions. The amazing instinct which God hath given to some animals, and their conduct, shame the slothful of mankind. Such sluggards are very averse to be roused to their work, spiritual or temporal. If one degree of indolence be denied them, they would gradually enjoy a lesser: but poverty in a quick, irresistible, and ruinous manner, comes to such at last. With alarming earnestness do sinners practise iniquity, and make every power of their soul, or member of their body, instrumental therein. And many things in heart, in lip, in life, are detested by God, which are overlooked as almost innocent by

CHAPTER VII.

1 Solomon persuadeth to a sincere and kind familiarity with wisdom. 6 In an example of his own experience, he showeth 10 the cunning of a lewd woman, 22 and the desperate simplicity of a young wanton. 24 He dissuadeth from such dangerous courses.

MY [a]son,[1] keep my words, and lay up my commandments with thee.

2 Keep[b] my commandments, and live; and my law [c]as the apple of thine eye.

1 Wisdom is here personified. She is represented as a great and universal teacher. In all places, at all times, under all circumstances, her lessons are within the reach of the thoughtful and attentive. The eternal Son is the grand revealer of divine wisdom. He is the universal Teacher. He teaches by various instruments and agencies —by the light of nature, by the inner conscience, by the dispensations of providence, and by the full and clear dictates of revelation. If men are ignorant, the fault is their own; it is because they wilfully shut their eyes and stop their ears.—P.

CHAPTER VIII.

1 The fame, 6 and evidence of wisdom. 10 The excellency, 12 the nature, 15 the power, 18 the riches, 22 and the eternity of wisdom. 32 Wisdom is to be desired for the blessedness it bringeth.

DOTH not [a]wisdom cry? and understanding put forth her voice?[1]

2 She standeth in the top of high places, by the way in the places of the paths:

3 She crieth at the gates, at the entry of the city, at the coming in at the doors:

4 Unto[b] you, O men, I call; and my voice is to the sons of man.

5 O[c] ye simple, understand wisdom; and, [d]ye fools, be ye of an understanding heart.

6 ¶ Hear, for I will [e]speak of excellent things; and the opening of my lips shall be right things.

7 For[g] my mouth shall speak truth; and wickedness is an abomination to my lips.[2]

8 All the words of my mouth are in righteousness; there is nothing [h]froward[3] or perverse in them.

9 They[i] are all plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge.

10 ¶ Receive[j] my instruction, and [k]not silver; and knowledge rather than choice gold.

men. With what ardent love ought we to regard the word of God as our enlightening instructor and regulating law! It is necessary to receive, retain, and improve it as a powerful mean to preserve us from fleshly lusts, which war against both body and soul. But terrible and fatal snares are the flattering words and looks of whorish and light women. It is impossible to avoid destruction if once we are entangled by them. And it is shocking that so many indulge themselves in a crime so infamous and destructive.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1–5. My dear young friends, let me again press upon your consciences to lay up my advices and instructions in your judgment, heart, and memory; and carefully, tenderly, and readily to observe and practise them. Make yourselves familiar with Jesus Christ, and his spiritual instructions, as the most powerful means of preservation from the ensnaring arts and flatteries of whorish women, which is a privilege of infinite importance. 6–9. For, from my own window I observed a thoughtless young fop sauntering under night in the streets, and in a stately manner walking towards a corner which these infamous strumpets used to haunt. 10–20. There, one dressed in a light and whorish manner, and extremely skilled in the arts of enticement,—one extremely talkative, ready to brawl with her husband, given to idle visiting, and gadding about to places of dissipation and concourse, —met him, caught him in her arms and kissed him, and in an impudent manner told him that, being a devout lady, she had that very day been offering thank-offerings to God; and being to feast upon her share of the flesh thereof, she had solicitously sought him to take a part of it, and had happily found him;—and that she had decked and perfumed her bed in the most engaging manner,—in which they might riot all night in exquisite pleasures, without any danger, as the silly fellow called her husband was gone a long journey, had a great deal of business to transact, and would not return till the full moon. 21–23. Notwithstanding his showing some aversion at first, she, by her fair pretences and flattering speeches, quickly compelled him to follow her, as willingly, and no less stupidly, than an ox goeth to the slaughter, or a madman to the stocks,—never thinking of anything but pleasure, till the enraged husband sheath his sword in his bowels, or the judgments of God accomplish his irretrievable ruin!—24–27. Let me therefore beseech you, my dear young men, whom I unfeignedly regard, diligently to observe and practise these warnings which I have repeatedly given you. Never indulge the smallest inclination towards such women; never listen to their enticements; never indulge the smallest fellowship or familiarity with such; never hope to be safe in, or to return from, such courses; for many, even of those noted in valour and wisdom, have been totally ruined in reputation, estate, body, and soul by such women; and fellowship with them is the certain road to a miserable death and eternal damnation.

Ver. 14. Peace-offerings. The law of God, De. 12. 6, 7, adjudged the greater part of the peace-offering to the offerer as a feast for himself and his friends. And here, by a perverse interpretation, the beneficence of religion is made a cloak and incentive to sin.—Note, And let every Christian note it well: to turn all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it.

12 ¶ I[n] wisdom dwell with prudence,[4] and find out knowledge of witty inventions.

13 The[o] fear of the LORD is to hate evil: pride,[p] and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate.

14 Counsel[q] is mine, and sound wisdom: I am understanding; [r]I have strength.[5]

15 ¶ By[s] me kings reign, and princes decree justice.

16 By me princes rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.

17 I[t] love them that love me; and [u]those that seek me early shall find me.

18 Riches[v] and honour are with me; yea, durable riches and righteousness.

19 My[x] fruit is better than gold, yea, than fine gold; and my revenue than choice silver.

20 I[y] lead[6] in the way of righteousness, in the midst of the paths of judgment;

21 That I may cause those that love me [z]to inherit substance; and I will fill their treasures.

22 ¶ The[a] LORD possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old.[7]

23 I[b] was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was.

24 When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water.

2 All wisdom, divine as well as human, must be sought after. It is not so much a gift as an acquirement. To obtain it our faculties must be exercised; our time must be diligently employed; every aid and instrumentality must be faithfully made use of. It is quite true that by mere human study man cannot attain to divine wisdom; but it is also true that God enables us to acquire that wisdom, not by any direct revelation, but by quickening our natural faculties so that we can see clearly and understand fully.—P.

the grace of God into licentiousness is a constant inclination in man, and a constant temptation of Satan. Let believers watch and pray that they follow neither. C.

Ver. 18. It is thus that by the misapplication of words, the world, the flesh, and the devil continue to seduce and destroy. Love is an attribute, a name for God himself; yet, under this name, the seducer covers her own perjury, her victim's lewdness, and the disregard and enmity of both to God. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is necessary to love, search, and meditate on God's law day and night; and to make it the constant food of our heart and standard of our life. Then should we find therein the most sanctifying virtue. Magistrates and ministers should carefully inspect the people committed to their charge! And there is need of frequent and fervent prayers to God for our friends and neighbours, as we know not in what guilt fearful temptations may involve them if not overcome. The devil quickly finds business for idle and unseasonable saunterers, especially if young. And when women are once addicted to flaunting, loose, and gaudy apparel, and to wheedling in love matters, and are extremely talkative, and given to an unsettled and dissipated course, it will require no great pains to make harlots of them. Terribly base and impudent these women become who have thrown off the restraints of modesty peculiar to their sex. And sad is the case when husbands and wives are glad to be rid of one another's company. It is shameful, wicked, and ruinous, when Satan and his abominable agents or lusts are, in days of youth, preferred to Jesus Christ and his grace. But fearful and speedy destruction, from the crime itself, or from the hand of God or man, awaits the whorish adulterer. Surely then we should be solicitous to improve the falls and miseries of others, as a warning for us to take heed, lest, in the same thoughtless and inconsiderate manner, we hurry ourselves into everlasting ruin.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1–11. And why, to your ruin, should you listen to the flattering enticements of whorish women, when Jesus Christ, the wisdom of God, by himself and his messengers, in the most open and earnest manner, calls you, and every one of mankind, even the most simple and foolish, to the study of true and spiritual wisdom;—to listen to, consider, and believe the excellent, pure, holy, substantial, faithful, precious, and infinitely useful oracles of his Word: 12–31. And in order to enforce his call, and recommend his instructions, represents himself as the infinitely wise God, the source of all wisdom and prudence; the infinitely Holy One, who detests everything proud, polluted, or perverse;—and the Almighty God, able to execute all his purposes, and by whose deputed authority all the magistrates on earth govern their subjects;—the infinite lover and rich rewarder of all that seek him, particularly in youth;—the inexhaustible portion and unerring guide of all those who receive him by faith:—the eternal and only begotten Son of JEHOVAH, appointed to be our Mediator;—the almighty Maker of all things in heaven and earth;—and who, from his infinite and peculiar love to mankind, took a distinguished pleasure in forming the earth as a theatre, whereon he should appear, save, and hold intimate fellowship with the sons and daughters of Adam. 32–36. On account of all which excellencies and kindness he, in the most earnest and condescending manner, entreats and charges you to hear, receive, and practically observe his instructions, attend his ordinances, and receive himself in them, as the free gift of God, and as the only mean of true and everlasting happiness;—and warns you, that if you refuse and hate him, you will infallibly and eternally ruin yourselves.

Ver. 1. He that would understand this, and similar passages, may consult Is. 11. 2, 3, where he will find the seven gifts of the Spirit enumerated as the endowments of Christ. And as every attribute of God is but a name for his being—so the forth-putting of every separate attribute is but an account of the actings of his being in that special view. Accordingly, 'wisdom and understanding' are here both used as titles of Christ—wisdom, to indicate his full comprehension of the interests and means of the house of God—understanding, to indicate his adequacy to sustain their weight, care, and management. C.

Ver. 5. Ye simple. This word is applied either to that singleness of heart that rejects the world and is persuaded of God, Ro. 16. 19, or that singleness of heart that rejects God and follows the world, Pr. 14. 15. Singleness is the original idea in both cases—the nature of that singleness is explained by its peculiar attributes, as it occurs. C.

Ver. 9. He that hath understanding, is not necessarily he that is learned; but he in whose heart the Word of God has been sown as a seed of life, and who has resisted and overcome the efforts of Satan to take it away, Mat. 13. 19. To such a one all the words of God are plain, because it is written, 'If any man will do his (the Father's) will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God,' Jn. 7. 17. C.

Ver. 12. Prudence implies foresight, forethought, and preparation for coming events. It is an attribute of God, Ep. 1. 8; and, rightly understood, a precious grace of the Spirit in man, Is. 52. 13.—Witty. This word is here used in the sense of ingenious, skilful. To the Spirit of God all human ingenuity is to be attributed, Ex. 31. 2, 3, the administration of whose gifts are all in the hands of Christ, the eternal Wisdom. C.

Ver. 18. Were further proof required that the WISDOM here speaking is Christ, it would here be furnished: none but he is righteous, Ro. 3. 10; 1 Jn. 2. 1; none but he has righteousness, Ro. 3. 22. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How public, earnest, and extensive are the calls of the gospel! Infinitely excellent is that Jesus Christ and his salvation therein exhibited and offered, and that religion which is therein prescribed. And happy, in the blessings of time and eternity, are those persons, families, and nations in which the knowledge of Christ and his truths prevail and reign! They are enriched with the fruits of his mediation, and filled with all the fulness of God. But is it not infinitely amazing, that God's eternal Son, the Creator and Preserver of all things, should have, from everlasting, entered into the room of, and fixed his thoughts, his delights upon, the children of men? Surely then he deserves our strictest attention, our earliest and strongest affection. And just and righteous is the sorest punishment which can be inflicted upon those self-ruiners who refuse him, and neglect and despise the ordinances of his grace. Let me consider this great Apostle and High-priest of my profession, this great ALL and IN ALL. Let my heart seek him early, earnestly, and above all things else. Let me love him, who first loved me, with my whole heart, soul, mind, and strength. Let me rejoice and delight in him as my exceeding joy, and all my consolation. Let me carefully attend his ordinances, watching daily at his gates, at the posts of his doors; and if I find him who is the great God my Saviour, and the eternal life, my pains will be infinitely more than rewarded.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1–5. And why enter the ruinous house or covet the ensnaring entertainment of a harlot, when the infinitely wise Jesus Christ, who is made of God unto us wisdom, hath framed, for his fellowship with men, a glorious church on earth and in heaven, fully supported by divine perfections, purposes, oracles, and offices; and hath prepared his own crucified self, his word, ordinances, and eternal felicities,

CHAPTER IX.

1 The discipline, 4 and doctrine of wisdom. 13 The custom, 16 and error of folly.

WISDOM [a]hath [b]builded her house, she hath hewn out her [c]seven pillars;[1]

2 She[d] hath killed her beasts;[2] she hath mingled her wine; she hath also furnished her table;

3 She[e] hath sent forth her maidens: [f]she crieth upon the highest places of the city,

5 Come, [i]eat of my bread, and drink of the wine which I have mingled.[4]

6 Forsake[j] the foolish, and live; and go in the way of understanding.

7 He[k] that reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame; and he that rebuketh a wicked man getteth himself a blot.

8 Reprove[l] not a scorner, lest he hate thee: rebuke[m] a wise man, and he will love thee.

9 Give[o] instruction to a wise man, and he will be yet wiser: teach a just man, and he will increase in learning.

10 The[p] fear of the LORD is the beginning of wisdom; and the knowledge of the Holy is understanding:

11 For[q] by me thy days shall be multiplied, and the years of thy life shall be increased.

12 If[r] thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself:[5] but [s]if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it.

13 ¶ A[t] foolish woman is clamorous; she is simple, and knoweth nothing.

14 For[u] she sitteth at the door of her house, on a seat in the high places of the city,

15 To[v] call passengers who go right on their ways:

16 Whoso[x] is simple, let him turn in hither; and as for him that wanteth understanding, she saith to him,

17 Stolen[y] waters are sweet, and bread eaten in secret[6] is pleasant.

18 ¶ But he [z]knoweth not [a]that the dead are there; and that her guests are in the depths of hell.[7]

1 Wisdom is here exhibited as building a firm, beautiful, and perfect temple, where all her votaries may dwell in princely magnificence and security. It is a refuge from the world's vanities, an asylum from its persecutions, and a school for the acquisition of divine truth. CHAPTER X.

From this chapter to the five-and-twentieth are sundry observations of moral virtues and their contrary vices.

THE Proverbs of Solomon. A [a]wise son maketh a glad father: but a foolish son is the heaviness of his mother.

2 Treasures[b] of wickedness profit [1]nothing: but righteousness delivereth from death.

3 The[c] LORD will not suffer the soul of the righteous to famish: but he casteth away the substance of the wicked.[2]

4 He[d] becometh poor that dealeth with a slack hand: but the hand of the diligent maketh rich.[3]

5 He[e] that gathereth in summer is a wise for the nourishment and satisfaction of sinful men; and in the gospel, by his faithful prophets, apostles, and ministers, earnestly invites and beseeches even the most weak, wicked, and besotted sinners of mankind to come by faith, and freely partake of his nourishing, strengthening, delightful, and satisfactory fulness and blessings? 6–12. Earnestly he admonishes you to avoid all unnecessary intimacy with wicked persons, as you regard your temporal or eternal happiness; as by it you cannot, even in attempting their reformation, justly expect to profit them, but may be sure of procuring hatred and infamy to yourselves;—and to cultivate familiarity with wise and serious persons, whom you may both profit and be profited by;—and to study true and experimental godliness, as the proper mean to render you truly happy in this world and in that which is to come; and solemnly warns you that you yourselves must reap the inexpressibly important fruits of your attention to or scornful rejection of his instructions.—13–18. And remember, as before God, that nothing more effectually renders men despisers of Christ and his blessings than fellowship with light and lewd women, or false teachers; who, ignorant of everything spiritually good, and extremely talkative, artfully and impudently seduce simple persons, who intend no such thing, to imagine that forbidden pleasures are peculiarly delightful. And, alas! few of those tempted by them seriously consider, that by such pleasures multitudes have already lost their lives, and are entered into the everlasting torments of hell.

Ver. 7. Blot. The shame of disappointed hopes, the blot of having cast what was holy before dogs, who turn again and rend the hand by which they have been fed, Mat. 7. 6. C.

Ver. 8. Reprove not a scorner. Why not reprove a scorner? Because Providence does not show that he is prepared to bear reproof. But deal with him in meekness; and pray for him in thine heart; and thus, and in this true and holy sense, become 'all things unto all men, that thou mayest save some,' 1 Co. 9. 19–22. C.

Ver. 16. Whoso is simple. The seducer here employs the language of WISDOM, ver. 4, even as Satan employed the language of Scripture in his temptation of our Lord, Mat. 4. 6.—Note, It has ever been the custom of error and heresy to employ, nay, to excel Scripture language; while inwardly, often rejecting its authority, and always perverting its meaning. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What great things Jesus Christ has done, and still does, for our salvation! O how unwilling is he that we should perish! Gloriously formed, and well supported and established, are his promise and church. Rich are his gospel provisions—his own flesh and blood, nay, all the fulness of God. And free and unencumbered with legal qualifications are his gospel calls. How absurd, insolent, and foolish are the scornful refusers thereof! For certain and just is their aggravated and everlasting ruin. And it is impossible to have fellowship with Christ, in grace or glory, and yet live in intimacy with wicked men. There is need of the utmost care, both in giving and taking reproofs. Fidelity in reproofs is the surest evidence of genuine friendship. None are too wise to learn, nor too good to amend. And they who rage at rebuke prove the weakness of their own understanding, as well as the want of grace. But, alas! what manifold temptations, suited to the taste of our corrupt hearts, are presented to us by Satan and his emissaries, to keep or draw us from Jesus Christ! And too many, through ignorance of and inattention to the danger, comply therewith. But however sweet the pleasures of sin be in the mouth, they are bitter in the belly; they issue in endless torment and anguish.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. It is a great comfort to parents to see their children profiting by their instructions and examples, and growing up in wisdom, piety, and virtue. But it is a grief and burden to them when they are foolish, stubborn, and profligate. 2. Ill-gotten riches afford no solid comfort in life, but draw on a wasting or poisoning curse: but Jesus' glorious love, and a holy, just, and merciful conduct, procure safety and deliverance from the greatest dangers. 3. The Lord, who has all fulness in his hand, will always grant necessary supplies, for both soul and body, to them who are justified in Christ and live in a just and merciful manner. But he will deprive the wicked of their ill-gotten possessions by some stroke of his providence, or remove them from it by death. 4. Negligence and sloth, and even fraudulent methods of gain, bring men to poverty; but active diligence tends to enrich men both in temporals and spirituals. 5. To seize upon and improve opportunities of obtaining spiritual or temporal things, particularly in the time of youth, is a mark of true wisdom: but he that slothfully neglects them, brings misery and shame upon himself and his parents. 6. The justified in Christ are, to their everlasting honour and safety, blessed in him with all the blessings of time and eternity: and outward blessings often attend the just and merciful on earth. But their own iniquity shall violently overwhelm and confound those who wickedly defraud and oppress their neighbours. 7. The pious and virtuous shall, at least after death, be remembered with honour and praise, men blessing God for their good example and useful conversation; but wicked livers shall either be forgotten or remembered with abhorrence. 8. They who are truly wise will thankfully receive and practise laws from God or good advices from men: but self-conceited persons, who will not learn of others, but love to hear themselves talk, shall bring themselves into contempt, sin, and misery: nay, into hell. 9. He who in dealing with God and men walks in candour, simplicity, and godly sincerity, is safe under the divine protection in his way to eternal life, and avoids manifold miseries and snares in this world; but he who indulges himself in hypocrisy towards God, and in inconstancy and deceit towards men, shall be detected and made a public reproach. 10. He who under pretence of kindness betrays his neighbour, and by signs mocks him or tempts others to injure him, is a common grievance, and shall at last become miserable; but a noisy and perpetual talker ruins himself by his words, and deserves to be beaten for his impertinence. 11. Good discourse always tends to the profit, comfort, and refreshment of those that receive it; but wicked men, to their own ruin, pour forth virulent and mischievous language; or, if their language be fair, it but conceals the mischief which they intend to effect when opportunity serves. 12. Where there is hatred in the heart, almost everything, however innocent, will be used to raise quarrels or disturbances: but love overlooks affronts and injuries, pacifies the mind of the injured, and composes contentions for which too much ground had been given. 13. Where wisdom abounds in the heart, the discourse of the lips will be sensible and son: but he that sleepeth in harvest is a son that causeth shame.

6 Blessings[g] are upon the head of the just: but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

7 The[h] memory of the just is blessed: but the name of the wicked shall rot.

8 The[i] wise in heart will receive commandments: but a prating fool[4] shall [5]fall.[6]

9 He[j] that walketh uprightly walketh surely: but he that perverteth his ways shall be known.

10 He[k] that winketh with the eye causeth sorrow: but a prating fool shall fall.[7]

11 The[l] mouth of a righteous man is a well of life: but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked.

12 Hatred[m] stirreth up strifes: but [o]love covereth all sins.

13 In[p] the lips of him that hath understanding wisdom is found: but a rod is for the back of him that is void of understanding.[8]

14 Wise[q] men lay up knowledge: but the mouth of the foolish is near destruction.[9]

15 The[r] rich man's wealth is his strong city: the destruction of the poor is their poverty.[1]

16 The[s] labour of the righteous tendeth to life; the fruit of the wicked to sin.

17 He[t] is in the way of life that keepeth instruction: [u]but he that refuseth reproof erreth.[2]

18 He[v] that hideth hatred with lying lips, and he that uttereth a slander, is a fool.

19 In[x] the multitude of words there wanteth not sin: but he that refraineth his lips is wise.

21 The[z] lips of the righteous feed many: but fools die for want of wisdom.[3]

22 The[a] blessing of the LORD, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it.

23 It[b] is as sport to a fool to do mischief: but a man of understanding hath wisdom.

24 The[c] fear of the wicked, it shall come upon him: but [d]the desire of the righteous shall be granted.[4]

25 As[e] the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more: [g]but the righteous is an everlasting foundation.[5]

26 As[h] vinegar to the teeth, and as smoke to the eyes, so is the sluggard to them that send him.

27 The[i] fear of the LORD [6]prolongeth [7]days: but [j]the years of the wicked shall be [8]shortened.

28 The[k] hope of the righteous shall be gladness: but the [l]expectation of the wicked shall perish.[9]

29 The[n] way of the LORD is strength to the upright: [o]but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

30 The[p] righteous shall never be removed: but [q]the wicked shall not inhabit the earth.

31 The[r] mouth of the just bringeth forth wisdom: [s]but the froward tongue shall be cut out.

32 The[t] lips of the righteous know what is acceptable: [u]but the mouth of the wicked speaketh frowardness.[1] edifying; but nothing but sore afflictions here, or the torments of hell hereafter, can bring obstinate fools to any serious reflection. 14. They who know the value of true wisdom labour to enlarge their knowledge, and to keep it up till they have proper opportunities for using it: but fools rashly blab out what tends to their own or others' ruin. 15. Riches make men confident and secure, and even protect them against manifold injuries in this world; whereas poverty depresses men's spirits, and exposes them to injury and abuse. 16. The industry of the righteous in outward things issues in the comfortable maintenance of himself and others; and his care for his soul issues in life spiritual and eternal: but whatever a wicked man has by inheritance, or by his own acquirement, hardens him in sin, and is abused to gratify his sinful lusts. 17. He is in the way to eternal life who receives, lays up in his heart, and practises the instructions of God's Word, and readily regards advices, and even reproofs, given him by others: but he who neglects to give reproof, encourages men in their mistakes; and he who refuses to take and improve instructions and reproofs, obstinately rushes upon his own destruction. 18. He who conceals his hatred by great professions of friendship before one's face, and he who artfully vents slander behind one's back, is, with all his cunning, an impious fool in God's reckoning, and his wickedness shall be publicly exposed. 19. Even in much speaking there are ordinarily to be found words idle or wicked. It is therefore prudent to be sparing in our words, and to consider well both when, and where, and what, and how we speak. 20, 21. Prudent and pious discourse is pure and substantial: it edifies, instructs, and nourishes the hearers: but the heart of the wicked, being only evil, and that continually, is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked; nothing good can proceed from it; but they persist and perish in the devices of their own foolishness, neither knowing nor caring to know the way of life and peace. 22. It is not men's anxious labour and care that make them rich, either in temporal or spiritual things; but the blessing of God upon their lawful endeavours confers riches, and enables to enjoy them comfortably, without pressure of guilt, tormenting fear, or perplexing care. 23. Senseless sinners take pleasure in, and make a jest of, the most horrid impieties they can commit: but they that are wise carefully avoid mischief, and all sporting with it or delighting in it. 24. The miseries which wicked men fear under the awakenings of conscience shall come upon them; and whatever blessings the righteous desire and pray for shall be granted them in due season. 25. However the wicked may bluster for a while, and threaten to overthrow everthing that stands in their way, they quickly and terribly ruin themselves and rush into misery: but the righteous, being built on Christ the Rock of Ages, and fixed in piety and virtue, stand fast for ever. No storm can shake their confidence, or deprive them of their durable and immovable felicity. 26. As vinegar sets the teeth on edge, and smoke is vexatious to the eyes, so sluggish, negligent, and dilatory persons vex and provoke them who send or employ them in any important business. 27. A religious observance of God's laws, and preserving of our body in temperance, soberness, and chastity, tends to prolong our life: but wickedness of itself, and by God's righteous judgments on account of it, brings on diseases, and hastens the sinner to his grave and to hell. 28. The hope of the godly, founded on Jesus' promise and blood, brings delight and satisfaction to the soul, and issues in everlasting felicity; but the hope of the wicked shall issue in disappointment and eternal misery. 29. Upright walking in Christ, and the exercising of piety and virtue, increase a person's strength for duty and courage in it: but the workers of iniquity shall be plagued with terrors and overwhelmed in misery. 30. Nothing so establishes persons or families in a relation to Christ as their righteousness, and a course of piety, justice, and mercy: but the wicked, however successful they may be for a time, shall never be able to fix themselves in their prosperity, but be rooted out from the enjoyment of it. 31. The godly, out of the good treasure of their heart, bring forth good discourse, which tends to make the hearers wise unto salvation: but he that uses his tongue to abuse, cozen, or raise dissension, or to blaspheme God and spread error, shall, in the end, have it silenced in hell. 32. The righteous know, and accustom themselves to speak things truly useful and edifying; but the wicked abandon their lips to falsehood, flattery, fraud, and calumny, or such like subtle but detestable arts of doing mischief.

Ver. 1. This is the commencement of the second great division of the book. It is different in structure from the first division. The latter is made up of parables and proverbs of considerable length; while the former consists wholly of brief, pointed sentences, each of which consists generally of two antithetical members, embodying one idea. Most of them are figurative, being based on some comparison, both in language and in idea. It is probable that, though all these proverbial sayings were at one time or another uttered by Solomon, yet most of them were of much older date. His diligent study had made him familiar with the wisdom of the ancients, and his powerful memory retained it. In the end he either wrote the proverbs out himself under divine guidance, or he employed others to do so. Most of these proverbs are examples of antithetic parallelism, the second clause containing the contrast to the first. Each verse is, as a rule, complete in itself, and embodies a perfectly intelligible sentiment. There is in each a truth clearly and sharply enunciated, and a lesson which is almost forced upon the heart. P.

Ver. 6. For the original meaning of blessing, see note on Ge. 1. 22, 28. And such blessings, spiritual, 'the just,' the justified by faith, enjoy in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, Ep. 1. 3—even the blessings of the election of grace, the adoption of children, the pardon of sin, acceptance in the Beloved, inseparable union with their exalted Head, the revelation of grace, and the eternal inheritance of unfading glory. C.

Ver. 12. Hatred stirs up strifes that are at rest; but love covers them over, so that they sleep and are not remembered. And it is not to small or few offences that this gentle office is extended: love covereth all, even the 'multitude of sins,' 1 Co. 13. 7. C.

Ver. 15. Wealth. Not the wealth of money, for that, by tempting cupidity, is often the cause of ruin; but the wealth of faith, of good works, 1 Ti. 6. 18; Ja. 2. 5, and spiritual wisdom, ver. 14. These constitute the 'strong city' of the rich believer, in which the poverty here described has neither lot, inheritance, nor defence. C.

Ver. 21. This is true, naturally and spiritually. A little instruction in mechanics and agriculture may almost miraculously multiply the food of a country; while the words of truth and com-

Ver. 22. No sorrow in remembering how it was got, no sorrow in estimating how much has been lost, no sorrow in contemplating how much is endangered, no sorrow in anticipating how lavishly it may be spent, and no sorrow in watching and protecting it from the covetous, the deceitful, or the violent. C.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1. All manner of injustice and fraud is extremely hateful and detestable to God, the governor of the world: but strict equity in the whole of our commerce one with another is highly pleasing to him. 2. Haughty conceit of ourselves, and insulting of others, draws along with it the utmost contempt and disgrace; both God and men take pleasure to mortify and expose the proud; but such as, having learned of Christ, live under a deep sense of their own weakness and unworthiness, find favour with men and acceptance with God. 3. When men sincerely practise what God has revealed to them, they may expect his Spirit to direct them in their duty and to their eternal felicity: but the obstinate adherence of sinners to their own lusts and imaginations, and their opposition to Christ and his laws, shall hurry them into certain and everlasting destruction. 4. Riches, heaped up by extortion or covetousness, are of no avail to deliver us from the wrath of God, or even the rage of men, when the time of punishment is come: but righteousness hath a promise of life annexed to it; it prevents those sins which would expose us to God's judgments or man's punishments; it secures against the sting of temporal, and prevents eternal death. 5, 6. Being made righteous in Christ, and sanctified by his grace, and studying a sincere and impartial observance of God's laws, are effectual means to secure direction in duty and deliverance from evil; but the wicked shall perish by those very impious and evil courses by which they hoped to secure or exalt themselves. 7. In death wicked men find all their projects and hopes utterly destroyed. Whatever they thought to accomplish by their riches, their power, or their friends, perishes together with them, while they themselves launch forth into eternal misery. 8. The righteous are frequently in an unexpected manner delivered from their perplexing troubles; and the wicked, who perhaps brought them into them, are plunged into those very miseries themselves. 9. By flatteries, false doctrines, and artful seductions, hypocrites draw their neighbours into sin, and thereby into ruin. But through knowledge of Christ and his Word shall the righteous be guarded against their wiles, and preserved from the destruction which they intended. 10. It is matter of general gladness when wise and godly men prosper and are advanced, because they use their power and wealth for the benefit of all around them; and great is the joy when wicked men, who, as plagues and curses where they dwell, corrupt their manners, and draw down the wrath of God upon them, are cut off. 11. By God's blessing upon the upright, and by their prayers, advices, and kindness, all around them are profited: but the wicked, by their blasphemies, errors, evil counsels, and maxims, corrupt men's manners, and ruin their welfare. 12. It is common for self-conceited fools to despise their neighbours, to reproach them as weak, or to render them ridiculous; but a prudent man, whatever he thinks, avoids speaking to the reproach of others; as, beside the wickedness of contemning others, none is so mean as to be insensible of it, or incapable of finding means of resentment. 13. They who make a trade of carrying tales from one to another, never stick at treacherously discovering the secrets which have been intrusted to them; but a faithful friend conceals, not only what has been intrusted to him, but everything else that could tend to his neighbour's prejudice. 14. Where prudent counsel is wanting, nations and private affairs go to wreck: but where many wise counsellors unite in their deliberations, every precaution will be taken, every danger prevented, and the most proper methods used to insure success. 15. He who stands bound for the debts of another man, especially one whose ability and honesty are unknown to him, is in great danger to be ruined in his estate: and the way to be secure in that point is to avoid and hate all such engagements. 16. Remarkable and increasing grace and virtue in a woman will engage affection and respect when all other accomplishments fade and decline; and strong men hold fast the wealth which they have acquired. 17. He who is kind and bountiful to others, secures to himself a gracious reward from God: but he who is covetous, hard-hearted, and cruel, brings trouble on himself and his relations. 18. Whatever wicked men do to render themselves rich, easy, or honoured, will disappoint their expectation; but they who exercise themselves in true piety and virtue, shall infallibly obtain the blessed reward of their works in time and eternity. 19. As holiness and virtue promote true happiness here and hereafter, so the more eagerly a man pursues an evil course, the more is he bent upon his own destruction. 20. Hypocrites, who live in enmity and opposition to God and his law, while they pretend much piety, kindness, equity, and candour, are of all men the most odious to him: but they who, being renewed by his grace, walk before him in truth, equity, simplicity, and godly sincerity, are, and shall for ever be, the objects of his special favour and delight. 21. Though wicked men should do their utmost attempt to strengthen themselves by leagues and associates, they shall never be capable of protecting themselves from the just punishment of their sin: but the righteous, and often their children for their sakes, though deserted of all men, shall be delivered by God himself from everything ruinous. 22. As a golden jewel is very ill placed in the snout of a swine, which is still routing in mires and dunghills; so beauty is ill bestowed upon a woman who, void of good sense, modesty, and virtue, loves to employ herself in perpetual talkativeness, and wallow in filthy lusts and whorish pleasures. 23. The righteous habitually desire, and shall obtain, solid and substantial blessings to themselves and others; but wicked men wish for mischief on others, and hope to execute their wrath and malice upon them; which in the end will only bring more fearful and lasting ruin upon themselves. 24, 25. They who, from a right principle, are remarkably liberal to the poor and to pious institutions, shall find their stock proportionably increased for their real advantage; and while they refresh and support others with their bounty, God shall reward them with prosperity of soul, in grace or comfort, or even with the enjoyments of this present world: but the pinching hand of avarice prevents enjoyment, or brings down the curse of God upon our substance. 26. He who, in a time of scarcity, hoards up corn to raise the price, shall be hated and cursed by mankind: but good wishes and commendations from men, and blessings from God, shall attend him who then opens his granaries and sells it at a moderate price. 27. He who earnestly sets himself to contrive and do good to others, shall obtain favour with God and men: but he who makes mischief his business shall draw upon himself the evil which he designs against his neighbour. 28. He that anxiously grasps for, and trusts in, riches as his surest support and defence, shall find them a broken reed to pierce him through with many sorrows, and shall fall to decay as a withered leaf: but the righteous, who are united to Christ by faith, and walk in all holy and just conversation, shall receive, out of his fulness, abundant supplies of quickening and fructifying grace, and shall thrive and prosper in their concerns. 29. He who by his passion, prodigality, covetousness, and ambition troubles his family, may for a time make a great bustle and stir, but it will issue in disappointment, disgrace, and poverty; and the fool, who knows not how to manage, and who lives without thought, shall be reduced to want, and forced to serve, if not sell himself to, a wiser neighbour. 30. A good man's graces, prayers, instructions, and examples are a mean of quickening, comfort, and prosperity to others around: and he that by instruction, prayer, or the like, draws men from Satan to the knowledge, faith, and obedience of Christ, shows forth true and heavenly wisdom. 31. If God will not pass his own favourites without proper correction for their sins in this world, who can justly expect that the obstinate and contemptuous breakers of his law shall escape the just punishment of their many crimes?

Ver. 3. Integrity literally signifies entireness. The love of God, united with the love of our neighbour—and that measured by the love of self—constitutes this entireness, this completeness of principle, which guides the believer in every way, however dark, intricate, or dangerous; and never is acquired by man as a sinner, but by the revelation of the love of God in Christ, which constrains him first to love God, and then his neighbour as himself. C.

Ver. 9. This fact was awfully exemplified by the scribes and Pharisees, that 'generation of vipers, hypocrites,' by whom speedy and terrible vengeance was brought down upon the nation whom they deceived. C.

Ver. 10. In the multitude, &c. This is a proverb frequently perverted, as if it meant, that in the multitude of talkers and b These are noble sentiments; and they prove that those grand virtues which are usually supposed to be the results of the milder and more perfect religion of Jesus, were thoroughly understood and inculcated by the sages of the Old Testament. We often hear of Christian charity, and Christian benevolence, and Christian love, as if these had never been known previous to the advent of our Lord. They are as old as creation. They lie at the foundation of Bible truth. There is no difference between the moral code of the Old Testament and that developed in the New.—F.

opinions there was safety—whereas counsellors, in the scriptural sense, are those who, being filled with the Spirit of God, which is a Spirit of counsel, Is. 11. 2, are 'wise to win souls,' and to lead men to Christ, the only refuge of sinners. C.

Ver. 21. This verse is generally interpreted of the confederacies of wicked men, ratified by hand joining in hand, as a manner of swearing. The interpretation of the judicious Brown Paterson, 'from hand to hand,' from one generation to another, seems greatly preferable, as in strict conformity with the following clause. C.

Ver. 22. Personal beauty is one of the gifts of God, and, like all his other gifts, may be employed for his glory and the good of the creature upon whom it is bestowed. But to this end it must be guided by discretion—a judgment formed in the light of divine truth on the origin and fading nature of the gift, and the accountability of the possessor for its use or abuse. Without this discretion, it is but like a costly ornament bestowed upon the swine, which degrades it by its unclean propensities—and 'returns, even from being washed, to its wallowing in the mire.' C.

Ver. 29. He that troubleth his own house, &c. This proverb is mainly directed to those who can govern their tongue and temper in public, but who lay aside this restraint, and forget 'the law of kindness' in their own houses. They shall inherit the wind—calms uncertain, and the storms destructive. C.

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. He who loves reproofs, advices, and instructions, will become wise and intelligent; but he who declines, hates, and is enraged at rebukes for his faults, is under the power of his brutish passions; and there is little hope that he will ever know or act like a man. 2. The man who, being united to Christ, is clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his grace, and deals kindly and bountifully with others, shall be more and more favoured and blessed of God; but he whose thoughts are bent on wickedness shall be condemned to suffer the just punishment of his iniquity. 3. No man, however subtle or powerful, shall be able to establish his own or his family's greatness by wicked methods: but the righteous, being rooted and grounded in the rock Christ, though shaken by manifold storms of trouble, shall remain unmovable in a flourishing state. 4. A pious, prudent, active, chaste, and affectionate wife is a singular ornament and honour to her husband: but one that is graceless, lazy, foolish, prodigal, peevish, boisterous, and wanton, shames him when abroad, and torments him at home; and, like an incurable disease, vexes his heart, hastens him to his grave, wastes his substance, and ruins his family. 5. The thoughts and designs of good men are managed with piety, equity, candour, and truth; but the contrivances of the wicked are carried on with fraud, dissimulation, and falsehood. 6. Wicked men, by their consultations with one another, and by their reproach and perjury, study to undo their opposers; but they who are sincerely good will labour, by their advice, testimony, recommendation, or request, to deliver such innocent persons from their snares. 7. God himself not only defeats the ruinous projects of the wicked, but totally destroys and extirpates them and their families: whereas he continues and establishes the persons, properties, and families of the just. 8. Not earthly science, honour, or riches, but spiritual wisdom, and a prudent management of his affairs, by fair and honest means, will render a man highly and lastingly honoured, and commended of God and of all good men. but he who indulges his obstinate corruptions, hates and opposes his duty, and labours by wicked means to accomplish his ends, shall bring himself into present and everlasting contempt. 9. Far happier is he who, making no pompous show in the world, lives within the bounds of his income, though it should hardly afford him a single servant, than he who shows away with a great deal of elegance, equipage, and attendants, when he can hardly get necessary subsistence, without running into debt, or some other shameful and miserable shift. 10. Good men have implanted in their hearts a tender concern for the welfare and life of the brute animals, much more for that of their servants and neighbours: but the nature of the wicked is so cruel, that the very kindnesses which they affect to show are maliciously designed and ruinous. 11. Diligent industry in lawful callings shall, through the blessing of God, afford men a competent portion of temporal things; but idleness and bad company mark a man foolish, and lead him into desperate, impoverishing, and ruinous courses. 12. Wicked men desire, approve, and practise deceitful arts for ruining others, and wish to be secure in so doing: but the piety and justice from which righteous men's actions proceed, bring forth glory to God, maintenance and blessings to themselves, and much benefit and advantage to others around. 13. Wicked men are often brought into trouble by their own rash speeches, treasons, perjuries, lies, and calumnies: but the righteous, by the providence of God, and even by their prudent discourse, avoid and escape from many difficulties, in which otherwise they had been entangled. 14. A man shall receive abundant blessings from God, as the reward of that good which he has done by his pious and profitable discourses or works. 15. Fools are so self-conceited, that they consult nobody, but hold right whatever they think or do themselves: but wise men, distrusting their own judgment and abilities, wisely ask and take advice or instruction of others. 16. Fools, having no command of their passions, are no sooner provoked, than rage and fury appear in their countenance, words, and actions; but prudent persons conceal that displeasure which would tend to their disgrace, and overlook the shameful provocation given them, rather than dishonour themselves by resenting it. 17. He who, especially when called to be a witness, boldly and freely speaks the truth, and nothing else, shows himself an honest man, and does justice to his neighbours: but he who conceals truth, forges lies, or attests falsehoods, shows himself a deceitful and mischievous villain. 18. Some, by false accusations, calumnies, and bitter reproaches, wound the reputations, spirits, or estates of their neighbours, and make discords and divisions among them: but good men, by their prudent speeches, will labour to heal men's reputations, compose their disputes, and comfort and edify their souls. 19. Constant adherence to strict truth in his speeches establishes a man's credit, and what he says can never be disproved; but a liar, though he may be at first believed, is soon after found out and confuted; and he is moreover apt to contradict himself, and blast his reputation for ever. 20. They who plot mischief shall, to their great vexation, be disappointed in their expectations, and even fall into that evil which they intended for others; but they who by their counsels labour to promote the piety, peace, and happiness of others, shall have lasting joy and comfort for their reward. 21. Let the wicked plot as they will, nothing shall befall the righteous, but what tends to their spiritual and eternal advantage; but the wicked shall be quite overwhelmed with inward plagues and outward calamities. 22. Lies and liars are remarkably hated and abhorred of God; but they who, in their speeches and whole conduct, act in truth, fidelity, and candour, are beloved, and shall be blessed by him. 23. A prudent man conceals the knowledge he has, except when called by Providence to use it for the benefit of others, and even then makes no boasting ostentation of it; but a fool, through thoughtlessness, rashness, or ambition to be esteemed wise, proclaims his own weakness and ignorance. 24. Diligent and prudent activity in honest callings is the way to obtain riches, honour, and authority; but laziness and villany render men poor and enslaved. 25. Anxious cares about the things of this world, griefs for disappointments and troubles, convictions of sin, and fears of hell, depress the most magnanimous spirit, and make it to pore disconsolate over its wretchedness: but good instruction and advice from friends, and especially the promises of God powerfully applied, revive and make it glad. 26. In his state of union with Christ, justification and adoption, in his inward graces, and his exercises of holiness, and in his abundant happiness, a righteous man is more excellent than his neighbour; but the way that the wicked takes to render himself great or happy only deceives and disappoints him, and issues in misery. 27. Lazy wretches cannot endure to prosecute their own schemes for obtaining earthly enjoyments; or what they have deceitfully obtained never affords them any real comforts, but, as it were, slips through their fingers, or rots at their side, or is taken from them: but the wealth and honour, which is obtained by an honest diligence, is extremely valuable and lasting, being blessed of God. 28. In receiving Christ as our wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption, and walking in him, there is a real possession of life spiritual, and a certain 17 He[u] that speaketh truth showeth forth righteousness: but a false witness deceit.

18 There[v] is that speaketh like the piercings of a sword: [z]but the tongue of the wise is health.

19 The[y] lip of truth shall be established for ever: [z]but a lying tongue is but for a [2]moment.

20 Deceit[a] is in the heart of them that imagine evil: [b]but to the counsellors of peace is joy.

21 There[c] shall no evil happen to the just: but the wicked shall be filled with mischief.

22 Lying[d] lips are abomination to the LORD: but they that deal truly are his delight.

23 A[e] prudent man concealeth [3]knowledge: but the heart of fools proclaimeth foolishness.

24 The[g] hand of the diligent shall bear rule: but the slothful[4] shall be under tribute.

25 Heaviness[h] in the heart of man maketh it stoop: [i]but a good word maketh it glad.

26 The[j] righteous is more excellent[5] than his neighbour: [k]but the way of the wicked seduceth them.

27 The[l] slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting: [m]but the substance of a diligent man is precious.

28 In[o] the way of righteousness is life; and in the pathway thereof there is no death.

CHAPTER XIII.

A WISE[a] son heareth his father's instruction: but [b]a scorner heareth not rebuke.

2 A[c] man shall eat good by the fruit of his mouth: but [d]the soul of the transgressors shall eat violence.[1]

3 He[e] that keepeth his mouth keepeth his life: but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction.

4 The[g] soul of the sluggard desireth, and prospect of life eternal; nor is there a single act of piety or virtue that tends to make a man miserable.

Ver. 14. The fruit of his mouth. A word of instruction, reproof, comfort, or kindness is sure to be, sooner or later, in some form repaid—and though never acknowledged by the world, will not be forgotten of God. In another sense also the proverb is fulfilled: the man who establishes a character for truth and intelligence, is sure to find his remuneration in character and employment, ver. 17, 19. C.

Ver. 21. No evil. No real, permanent evil. Troubles, pains, and even distresses, he may feel, but there is nothing really evil that is not superseded by the enjoyment of eternal blessedness. C.

Ver. 26. More excellent. 'More successful' (A. Williams). But as there is none righteous but Jesus, Ro. 3. 10, 22, the words either describe him who is 'fairer than the sons of men,' or the man who is made righteous by faith in Jesus, and whose excellency lies in the imputation of righteousness, and the renewal of his nature by the power of his Spirit. C.

CHAPTER XIII. Ver. 1. Wise children will reverently receive, obey, and submit to their parents' instructions, advices, and corrections; but there is no hope of him who laughs and scoffs when he is admonished or chidden for his faults. 2. He who lays himself out in instructing, advising, and comforting others, or in other edifying discourse, shall be regarded by men and rewarded by God: but evil speakers shall be forced to endure those miseries which they brought upon others. 3. He that carefully bridles his tongue, thinks well before he speaks, and takes heed to utter nothing improper or unseasonable, preserves himself from much trouble and danger: but he who is extremely talkative, throwing out everything that comes into his head, is in the ready way to be ruined, both by God and by man. 4. Nothing, neither riches, nor learning, nor honour, nor happiness, is to be gotten by mere sluggish desires, without diligent endeavours; but they who, in a dependence upon God, industriously use proper means, shall have sufficiency of outward things, and abundant comforts in Christ, both here and hereafter. 5. A righteous man not only carefully avoids, but hates, all manner of falsehood in heart, word, and deed; but a wicked man continues to impose upon others, till his detected falsehoods and villanies render him evidently odious to God and detested by men, as a stinking carcass; and so contemptible that he dare not show his face for shame. 6. They who have Jesus' sacrificial life in them, and his grace accepted by them, and who study uprightness and equity in their whole conduct, shall be preserved sound in the faith, steadfast in the obedience of the gospel, unmoved by Satan's temptations or the world's frowns or smiles; but the wicked man, and all his wicked contrivances, shall be overthrown by their own iniquity. 7. Some, in their pride and vanity, make a great show of wealth, wisdom, or grace, when they are worth nothing: while others, by their garb or their speeches, conceal their abundant riches, knowledge, or grace. 8. Riches are so far from rendering men truly happy, that they tempt others to rob or accuse them, that their lives may be saved by huge sums of money; whereas the poor is reckoned so inconsiderable, that nobody thinks it worth while to rob, accuse, or even rebuke him. 9. The holiness, comfort, and prosperity of the righteous continues in its brightness and glory: but the small appearance of comfort and happiness which the wicked enjoy in this world will quickly be extinguished in endless misery. 10. Pride is the principal, and often the sole, cause of quarrels and contentions, and of the continuance of them: the opinionated cannot bear contradiction; the aspiring, a rival; the self-willed, opposition: but they who piously consult their God and their Bible, and prudently advise with their discreet neighbours, transact things in quietness and peace. 11. Wealth gotten by fraud, gaming, theft, oppression, or the like, having the curse of God upon it, shall quickly be wasted: but that which is gotten by honest industry and diligence shall continue and increase. 12. The delay of that which a man eagerly expects renders his mind very uneasy; but when he enjoys what he long desired and looked for, it is sweet, satisfactory, and reviving. 13. He who despises God's word, or the advices of his faithful friends, shall quickly be ruined: but he who reverently submits himself to and obeys God's commandments shall be rewarded. 14. The instructions of a good man, and much more the doctrines of God's Word, refresh, comfort, and enliven the soul, and preserve from those pernicious principles and destructive practices by which many are insnared. 15. A prudent, pious, and regular behaviour is most amiable and acceptable to all men: but the behaviour of lawless and wicked persons, like a rough way, is very ruinous to themselves, and offensive to God and good men. 16. Prudent persons undertake nothing but with due deliberation, and what they understand: and manage their affairs with knowledge and discretion: but fools discover their weakness, by rashly meddling with matters out of their reach. 17. Unfaithfulness in discharging his trust, or delivering his message, will bring a wicked servant, ambassador, or minister into shame, condemnation, and misery: but he who acts faithfully procures safety and advantage both to his master and himself. 19. It is a high satisfaction to enjoy what we desire, especially spiritual blessings and comforts: but foolish sinners hath nothing: but the soul of the diligent shall be made fat.

5 A[h] righteous man hateth lying: [i]but a wicked man is loathsome, and cometh to shame.

6 Righteousness[j] keepeth him that is upright in the way: but wickedness overthroweth the sinner.[2]

7 There[k] is that maketh himself rich, yet hath nothing:[3] there[l] is that maketh himself poor, yet hath great riches.

8 The[m] ransom of a man's life are his riches: but the [n]poor heareth not rebuke.

9 The[p] light of the righteous [4]rejoiceth: [q]but the lamp[5] of the wicked shall be put out.

10 Only[r] by pride cometh contention: but with the well-advised is wisdom.

11 Wealth[s] gotten by vanity shall be diminished: [t]but he that gathereth by labour[6] shall increase.

12 Hope[u] deferred maketh the heart sick: but [v]when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.[7]

13 Whoso[x] despiseth the word shall be destroyed: [y]but he that feareth the commandment shall be rewarded.[8]

14 The[z] law of the wise is a fountain of life, to depart from the snares of death.

15 Good[a] understanding giveth favour: [b]but the way of transgressors is hard.

16 Every[c] prudent man dealeth with knowledge: but a fool [9]layeth open his folly.

hate to forsake their lusts and sinful practices, even as means of receiving the choicest benefits. 22. By gaining his estate in a just and upright manner, and by doing good with it while he lives, and by earnest instruction of and fervent prayers for his family, a good man takes the surest course to fix his estate upon them for many generations: but the sinner leaves a curse entailed upon his wealth: and, by the righteous providence of God, it is quickly transferred from his family to one that is truly pious and virtuous. 23. Poor men, by their diligent labour and industry, many times abundantly provide for themselves and family, and even grow rich; while others, who are rich, are reduced to poverty, through their ignorance, rashness, injustice, oppression, deceit, &c. 24. That fond affection which restrains parents from duly correcting their children when they do amiss, is a real and ruinous hatred, a sinful withholding from them a mean, appointed by God, for their amendment and happiness: but parents who truly love their children will study, by early and Christian corrections, to prevent their fixing in evil habits or customs. 25. A righteous man never wants satisfaction, because his desires are moderate, and he lives in a temperate use of God's blessings; God gives him a competency, a heart to use it, and contentment in it: but wicked men, insatiable in their desires, and extravagant in the abuse of their plenty, shall be indigent in the midst of abundance, or reduced to the distresses of poverty.

Ver. 3. As a little helm governs the largest ship, so does the tongue govern the man; and as he that governs the helm guides the ship, he that can govern the tongue can command the man—and in doing so, he 'keepeth his life'—his life of faith in Jesus, of peace with God, and of joy in the Holy Ghost, and hope of glory. C.

Ver. 6. Righteousness. Not his own righteousness, for that has no existence beyond the name, Ro. 3. 10: but the 'righteousness of God which is, by faith of Jesus Christ, unto all, and upon all them that believe,' Ro. 3. 22. C.

Ver. 7. Maketh himself poor. A man may, in the natural sense, 'make himself poor,' as in educating and providing for his family, and thereby he is made truly rich. He may also make himself comparatively poor by deeds of beneficence, and be in the sight of God 'rich in good works,' 1 Ti. 6. 18. But, in the spiritual sense, the passage is most completely verified: for the man that, by grace, 'maketh himself poor in spirit,' is, in return, enriched with possession of the kingdom of heaven, Mat. 5. 2. C.

Ver. 8. The poor heareth not rebuke. The poor in the world, and the poor in spirit, are like some humble plant, in a valley far below the storms of the higher regions: they hear them not. The one might be happy, if he valued the peace of his station: the other is really so, for he enjoys the peace of God. C.

Ver. 14. The law—the word and doctrine of the wise—which teaches to depart from the ways of sin and death, is a fountain of spiritual comfort and peace, springing up to life eternal, Jn. 4. 14. C.

Ver. 15. A man of 'good understanding' will do a favour when in his power; but the way of transgressors is hard; that is, unkind, offensive, violent. C.

Ver. 19. He that would accomplish good, must often pass 'through bad report,' and labour after his object with much self-denial—but Providence will repay him in the end with the sweet satisfaction of good attained, as well as intended. But fools will never sacrifice present indulgence for future hopes; self-denial, repentance, and godliness are their 'abomination'—'their god is their belly—their end is destruction,' Phi. 3. 19. C.

Ver. 24. Let parents beware of misunderstanding this precept, 'The rod' does not signify merely the 'rod' of punishment, but also the 'rod' of a dignified authority; of a habitual, temperate, and chastened restraint. C.

CHAPTER XIV. Ver. 1. A virtuous wife, by her piety, prudence, good economy, and the like, supports and advances her family in honour, happiness, and wealth: but a wicked imprudent wife, by her pride, prodigality, idleness, carelessness, or otherwise, will quickly reduce a happy family to poverty, disgrace, and ruin. 2. By a universal regard to piety and virtue, men manifest the fear and holy reverence of God implanted in their heart: but by an obstinate rebellion against his laws, and eager study to gratify their sinful lusts and passions, they discover their profane contempt of his Majesty. 3. The insolent, calumniating, and contemptuous speeches of proud men are very injurious and wounding to others, and often at last prove a scourge to themselves: but the prudent, peaceable, and pleasing words of wise men, neither offending God nor men, secure them in safety. 4. They who would have plenty must be content with the dirt that labour makes; or if the tillage of the fields be neglected, famine must follow; but laborious tillage will issue in great plenty. 6. Proud self-conceited scoffers at what is holy and serious are never like to profit by their studies, or to come to the knowledge of divine truth; whereas they who humbly, and dependently on God, apply themselves to search out truth, quickly attain to the knowledge of whatever is necessary and useful. 7. It is proper to flee from the company of such persons as discover the corruption of their heart in the vanity or wickedness of their words. 8. Prudent men chiefly study to know how to act in their own calling and religious course; but wicked men employ their knowledge and wit to deceive others. 9. Insensible of the evil, malignity, and danger of sin, wicked men harden themselves in it, please themselves with their own and other men's sins, sport themselves in the commission or recollection thereof, and so provoke God to wrath against them; but they who are afraid of, hate, and avoid sin, truly love and regard their neighbours, and obtain favour with God and man. 10. No one can know what another inwardly suffers in worldly griefs and vexations, or in troubles of conscience; neither can they share with him in his inward joys, particularly those of a spiritual nature. 11. The stately houses, wealthy and honoured families of the wicked, shall in wrath be reduced to ruin and misery, and their hopes of eternal happiness issue in everlasting despair; whereas the poor and unsettled family of the truly pious shall flourish and become illustrious. 12. There is need strictly and impartially to try courses and customs: for prejudice, self-flattery, affected ignorance, and the like, make many things seem lawful and good which are really sinful and ruinous. 13. Immoderate joys and pleasures are ordinarily mingled with and issue in inward vexation and anguish: and the diverting of inward convictions and important duties by carnal mirth will quickly issue in the weepings and wailings of eternal despair. 14. He who even in heart revolts from God and his ways, shall be fearfully overwhelmed with the punishment of his sin; but a good man, who steadfastly cleaves to the Lord, shall enjoy great comfort in the testimony of a good conscience, and in keeping God's commands. 15. Weak half-witted persons believe every idle story and plausible pretence, and thereby are drawn into evil: but prudent men examine things before they trust to them or practise them. 16. A wise man, when warned of his error or danger, fears to displease God or to provoke his wrath, and immediately starts back from the sin to which he was tempted, or in which he had involved himself: but a fool rages against those that reprove, warn, or threaten him, and goes on resolutely in sin, fearless of any danger. 17. He who is soon angry involves himself in rash and imprudent words and actions, for which he is to be pitied: but a man who conceals

3 In[c] the mouth of the foolish is a rod of pride: but the lips of the wise [e]shall preserve them.

4 Where no oxen are, the crib is clean: [g]but much increase is by the strength of the ox.

5 A[h] faithful witness will not lie: but a false witness will utter lies.

6 A[i] scorner seeketh wisdom, and findeth it not: [j]but knowledge is easy unto him that understandeth.

7 Go[k] from the presence of a foolish man, when thou perceivest not in him the lips of knowledge.

8 The[l] wisdom of the prudent is to understand his way: [n]but the folly of fools is deceit.

9 Fools[o] make a mock[1] at [2]sin: [p]but among the righteous there is favour.

10 The[q] heart knoweth his own bitterness;[3] and a stranger doth not intermeddle with his joy.

11 The[r] house of the wicked shall be overthrown: but the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.

12 There[s] is a way which seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death.

13 Even[t] in laughter the heart is sorrowful; and the end of that mirth is heaviness.

14 The[u] backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways; [v]and a good man shall be satisfied from himself.

15 The[x] simple believeth every word: but the prudent man looketh well to his going.

16 A[y] wise man feareth, and departeth from evil: but the fool [z]rageth, and is confident.

17 He[a] that is soon angry dealeth foolishly; and[b] a man of wicked devices is hated.

1 Fools do not acknowledge, but always attempt to excuse and palliate, their sins.—C.
2 This is very common in the world. Open sins—shameful sins are often made topics of merriment and joking. Nothing could be more unseemly, and nothing could be more injurious in its influence. Sin as a violation of God's law, as an offence against the majesty of Heaven, as a blot upon the immortal soul of man, which was made in the divine image, ought ever to be regarded with feelings of holy horror and profound regret. Besides, joking and merriment make us familiar with that which forms their subject; the moral sense is thus dulled and deadened, and the way opened up to personal indulgence.—P.

his wrath, and deliberately contrives how to take a cruel revenge, deserves to be hated and abhorred. 18. Inconsiderate sinners hold fast their wickedness, and delight in it, as their portion and inheritance, till they feel the woful effects of it: but the prudent, to their remarkable honour and influence, increase in spiritual understanding. 19. Even in this world the wicked are often obliged to stoop and submit to the righteous, and implore their favour and relief: and at the last day, the debasement of the wicked, and exaltation of the righteous, shall be complete. 20. If a man fall into poverty, his neighbours, who once professed great friendship, will forsake and disregard him: but if a man grow rich, many, who before took no notice of him, will pretend great affection to him, and even the greatest will offer him their favour. 21. He who overlooks and contemns his poor neighbour provokes God to punish and render him miserable: but he who compassionately relieves the poor shall be blessed by God on that account. 22. They who contrive mischief against their innocent neighbours miss their end and ruin themselves: but they who study to do men real good shall be graciously and faithfully rewarded by God. 23. Industrious labour in any lawful calling will bring in some gain: but talkativeness and proud boasting tend only to make men beggars. 24. Riches are a singular ornament and advantage to wise men who know how to use them, because thereby they have the greater opportunities of doing good: but riches only render foolish men's folly the more notorious, because they have thereby the greater opportunities of doing mischief and wickedness. 25. An upright witness will, at all hazards, avow the truth, to save the lives or characters of such as are falsely accused: but deceitful men will boldly pour forth lies and calumnies to destroy the innocent. 26. They that fear God may be confident of his protection to themselves and their posterity in times of danger. 27. A holy regard to God, and obedience to his law, will issue in men's solid and eternal comfort, and preserve them from those sinful courses in which many are ensnared to their own destruction. 28. Kings ought to cherish their subjects; for on their number, wealth, and power, their own honour depends; and if they be wasted by unnecessary wars, or forced by oppression into other countries, it will prove the ruin of the kingdom. 29. He who under great provocations can maintain a calmness of temper, discovers much wisdom and grace: but he who is hastily inflamed by reproaches and ill-usage, exposes his corruption and folly, and makes it apparent to every one. 30. Nothing more conduces to health and happiness than a mind renewed by God's Spirit, freed from the dominion of sinful lusts, quiet, gentle, and contented: but envy, and such like fretful passions, torment men's spirits, waste their bodies, and hasten them towards hell and the grave. 31. He that defrauds or oppresses the poor, or withholds the relief which their circumstances require, forgets and even practically blasphemes God who makes them poor, and engages himself to defend and relieve them: but he who hath any due respect to God will show pity to the poor, and labour to supply them. 32. In death the wicked is suddenly and irresistibly driven away from all his beloved hopes and enjoyments in his sinful state; and often, in the very act of sin, and always on account of it, into everlasting misery: but the righteous, being united to Christ, clothed with his righteousness, and sanctified by his indwelling Spirit, has, even in trouble and death, well-grounded hopes of eternal felicity. 33. Prudent men study to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of Christ, without making unseasonable or ostentatious demonstrations of it: but foolish men expose themselves by their eager desire to vent their minds in every company. 34. Religion and virtue, equity and kindness, through the blessing of God, increase the glory, power, and wealth of a nation: but rebellion against God, or injuring of mankind, disgraces and ruins societies. 35. A prudent, active, and faithful minister of state cannot but be dear to a wise king: and one who by his ill management disgraces his government, and brings all things into confusion, cannot but be the object of his wrath.

Ver. 1. The wise woman, by her prudence and management, godly example, and instruction, raises her family either in riches or character, or both; while the foolish, by her vanity, extravagance, and neglect, brings ruin upon herself, her husband, and her children. This truth applies to churches as well as to families. C.

Ver. 6. Those that would not strive, Lu. 13. 24, 25, and the 'foolish virgins' who neglected, Mat. 25. 8–11, all sought to enter and were refused. The first, because they did not strive; and when forced to come near, they still stood without, and would not enter by Christ the door, Jn. 10. 9; and the 'foolish virgins' came without light, without Christ 'the true light,' Jn. 1. 4, 9, and were therefore justly rejected and condemned, Jn. 3. 19. C.

Ver. 12. If a man judge by temporal advantages, and not by eternal interests—if he follow human authority in preference to divine truth—if he obey the impulse of passion instead of reason and conscience, all his ways will seem right when seen by these false lights, but their seeming will not change their nature—they all terminate in spiritual and eternal death. C.

Ver. 14. A good man shall be satisfied from himself. How can a man be satisfied from himself? Not from himself, as a branch bearing fruit by its own power: but from himself as a branch in Christ the living vine, and bearing all his fruit because of this union, Jn. 15. 5; not from himself as a mine, natively producing silver, gold, or gems; but from himself as an earthen vessel which God has enriched with his heavenly treasures, 2 Co. 4. 7. C.

Ver. 19. The evil bow before the good. Sooner or later this event is always realized; and the temporary exceptions never hath understanding: but that which is in the midst of fools is made known.

34 Righteousness[a] exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people.[1]

35 The[b] king's favour is toward a wise servant: but his wrath is against him that causeth shame.

CHAPTER XV.

A SOFT[a] answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words[1] stir up anger.

2 The[b] tongue of the wise useth knowledge aright: [c]but the mouth of fools [d]poureth out foolishness.

3 The[e] eyes of the LORD are in every place, beholding the evil and the good.

4 A[g] wholesome tongue[2] is a tree of life:[3] but perverseness therein is a breach in the spirit.

5 A[h] fool despiseth his father's instruction: but he that regardeth reproof is prudent.

6 In[i] the house of the righteous is much treasure: but in the revenues of the wicked is trouble.

7 The[j] lips of the wise disperse knowledge: but the heart of the foolish doeth not so.

8 The[k] sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the LORD: [l]but the prayer of the upright is his delight.

9 The[m] way of the wicked is an abomination unto the LORD: [o]but he loveth him that followeth after righteousness.

10 [p]Correction[4] is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way; and he that hateth reproof shall die.

11 Hell[q] and destruction are before the [5]LORD; how much more then the hearts of the children of men?

12 A[r] scorner loveth not one that reproveth him; neither will he go unto the wise.

13 A[s] merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance: but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.

14 The[t] heart of him that hath understanding seeketh knowledge: [u]but the mouth of fools feedeth on foolishness.

15 All[v] the days of the afflicted are evil: [g]but he that is of a merry heart hath a continual [6]feast.

16 Better[y] is little with the fear of the LORD, than great treasure, and trouble therewith.

17 Better[z] is a dinner of herbs where love is, than a stalled ox, and hatred therewith.

finally weaken or contradict the general rule. It is now verified in every righteous judgment by an upright judge upon earth: it will finally be completed by the Judge of the quick and the dead. C.

Ver. 30. A sound heart. A sound heart is a heart restored to spiritual health by Jesus, the only physician of the soul, Mat. 9. 12; and its principal symptoms are faith, hope, and love—a 'conscience void of offence,' because 'sprinkled from dead works,' which contributes as much to relieve bodily suffering, and promote bodily health, as to remove spiritual trouble and promote peace and enjoyment. C.

Ver. 33. Wisdom will neither 'cast its pearls before swine, nor give that which is holy to the dogs,'—and must therefore often rest and wait for opportunities. But the vanity that is in the heart of fools is always seeking occasions for display, and cares nothing about others if it only can glorify itself. C.

CHAPTER XV. Ver. 1. Mild, submissive, and yielding answers pacify anger and wrath: but sharp, contemptuous, and impertinent language increases passion, or kindles it up where it was not before. 2. A wise man gives profitable instructions, and understands how to speak in a seasonable and prudent manner: whereas fools, by the worthless stuff they utter, and by their indiscreet and confused manner of expressing their thoughts, only manifest their own folly. 3. The infinite knowledge and observance of God extends everywhere, and to every person or action, thought, or disposition, whether good or bad. 4. Wholesome and profitable discourses instruct the ignorant, comfort the grieved, heal breaches, cure contentions among neighbours, and soften the exasperated; but corrupt, proud, passionate, and erroneous discourse disturbs the peace, and corrupts the temper and manners, of both speakers and hearers. 5. Inattention to the instructions, advices, and reproofs of superiors, manifests and issues in the greatest folly; but he who willingly receives rebukes, and carefully observes them, shows himself wise, and prudently consults his own welfare and happiness. 6. A truly pious, just, and merciful man is really very rich; as, however little of this world's wealth he may possess, he has all things working for his real advantage, and God's blessing on what he has, and is contented with it: but vexation and trouble embitter the revenues of the wicked. They are gotten with anxiety, enjoyed under a curse, employed in the service of sin, and tend to their ruin. 7. Wise men tender good instructions, advices, and reproofs to all around them: but foolish men, having their heart filled with ignorance and lust, impart nothing valuable. 8. All the external devotions and most liberal almsgivings of wicked men, are so far from recommending them to God's favour, that they are abhorred by him as but the vile gratifications of their own pride, legality, or other lusts; but the most humble prayers and meanest services of those united to Christ, which are performed in faith and dependence on him, and sincerely aiming at his glory, are exceedingly acceptable to him, and issue in much comfort to themselves. 9. The whole designs, contrivances, thoughts, words, and actions of wicked men are abominable to the Lord; and this renders their religious services corrupt and hated: but he loves such as, having Jesus' sacrificial life in their souls, do, in their thoughts, affections, and endeavours, earnestly study to perfect holiness in his fear. 10. Such as dislike faithful reproof, for their apostasy from the ways of the Lord, shall be severely punished; and at last, if they continue haters of admonition and advice, shall certainly be lost. 11. The state of the dead and lost, and every other thing unknown to us, are perfectly known to God. How exact then must be his knowledge and observance of the dispositions, purposes, and thoughts of men! 12. Mockers of God and religion shun the admonitions of their conscience, and hate such as reprove them; and even avoid the company of wise, religious, or virtuous persons, lest they should meet with their reproofs or advices. 13. When the conscience is graciously purged and quieted, and the mind comforted, it issues in outward health and cheerfulness: but grief and sorrow, seizing on the heart, disturb, weaken, and dispirit it, and make a man a burden to himself and to all around. 14. Such as are truly wise, and inwardly instructed by the Spirit of God, earnestly study to obtain more solid knowledge: but persons void of true understanding gape after, and relish nothing but frivolous, vain, and unprofitable things. 15. All the days of persons discontented under their afflictions are grievous and miserable: but they who have their conscience graciously quieted, their heart joyful in God, and content with their lot, have more true and perpetual comfort and satisfaction than can be enjoyed in the most delicious banquet on earth. 16. A very small share of earthly enjoyments, attended with real grace and true holiness, is better than the largest abundance of wealth with the disquiet, confusion, and anxious care which usually attend it. 17. The meanest fare, attended by the mutual love of friends, is far preferable to the most sumptuous entertainment attended with hatred and contention. 18. Hasty, passionate, and furious persons are apt to quarrel for very trifles, and so disturb the most peaceable company: but those who are humble, meek, and patient, instead of raising strife themselves, will labour to compose it when it has been raised by others. 19. A slothful man is apt to fancy or pretend a great many unconquerable difficulties in the way of his duty: but a good and active person looks on his way as easy and plain, notwithstanding a few trifling hindrances. 20. Nothing so much rejoices the hearts of pious parents as to see their children grow up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord: but foolish children requite their mothers' fond indulgence by irreverent carriage towards them; and by despising their commands, instructions, advices, or reproofs, and so making them contemptible. 21. They who are void of grace, sense, and consideration, take pleasure in doing the most empty, absurd, and wicked things: but such as are truly knowing and wise study for their own pleasure and comfort, as well as for the honour of God, to conduct their thoughts, words, and actions in a regular, sincere, and holy manner. 22. Without prudent counsellors, and for want of due deliberation, the most important designs and projects often miscarry: but where, by prudent consultation, difficulties are foreseen and provided against, men's purposes succeed to their wish. 23. Ready, pertinent, and seasonable advice is an honour and comfort to him who gives it, especially when the good success of it is found, and it is very profitable to him who receives it. 24. Holy and gracious persons, in the pursuit of everlasting life, set their affections and hopes on things above, have their conversation in heaven, and eye the glory of God in everything they do, that they may escape sinful pollutions, horrid dangers, and everlasting destruction. 25. God takes pleasure to debase the proud, demolishing their stately houses, overturning their families, and ruining their honours and wealth: but he will preserve poor widows who have no helper in their rights, against every insolent or covetous invader. 26. The Lord abhors the thoughts, inclinations, purposes, and contrivances of wicked men: but the hearts of the godly being purged by his blood and Spirit, their prayers, and edifying instructions, advices, and reproofs are pleasant to him and his people. 27. They who hasten to be rich, and with anxious care labour for worldly enjoyments, not only harass all around them, but weary themselves, and plague their families, and bring the curse of God on what they have: but he who hates bribes and other unlawful methods of gain, shall have a competent portion of the good things of this world, and comfort and prosperity in it. 28. A good man avoids answering before he is asked, and studies to say nothing but what is pure, profitable, suitable, and seasonable: but a wicked man is apt, in a rash and forward manner, to speak what is unsuitable, sinful, and hurtful. 29. The Lord utterly dislikes wicked persons, and refuses to regard their prayers: but he is ever willing and ready to hear the prayers of the godly offered to him in faith, and is their sure and present help in time of work or warfare. 30. It is a remarkable pleasure to behold the manifold works of God: and the good report of a given and offered Saviour, and of reconciliation to God and eternal salvation, or even a good report of ourselves or neighbours, affords inward satisfaction and comfort. 31. They who with pleasure listen to and improve wholesome instructions, tending to promote their spiritual or eternal life, increase in wisdom, and shall be qualified to give good instruction to others. 32. Such as refuse or contemn proper instructions or reproofs undervalue their own soul, neglect the means of its safety, and, for the sake of some outward and perishing thing, wilfully ruin it: but he who delights to be taught and admonished, increases in solid, soul-comforting, and saving knowledge, wisdom, and prudence. 33. A holy awe of God, and real regard to his way, disposes us to the study of true wisdom and knowledge, and is a certain mark of it; and humility and patient submission in a low condition is the best preparation for honour and preferment.

Ver. 6. In the house of the righteous is much treasure. That is, (1) Christ the righteous, who has hid in him 'all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge;' (2) the righteous, through faith in Christ, having all the treasures of divine wisdom, faith, hope, charity, communicated by his Word and Spirit; (3) of temporal treasures, the righteous always possesses contentment, which is inseparable from godliness, and is 'great gain;' while he possesses that industry of hand which arises from freedom of spirit, and is the fruitful parent of all earthly prosperity. C.

Ver. 8. The prayer of the upright is his delight. 'The upright' are those who are not ashamed to look up with 'boldness to the throne of grace for grace to help them;' and their prayer a 'delight to the Lord,' because it renounces all the righteousness of the creature, and altogether relies upon the 'righteousness of God which is by faith of Jesus Christ.' C.

Ver. 27. He that is greedy of gain troubleth his own house. By needless and distracting cares and toils, by transfusing the spirit of covetousness into his children, and by all the retributive consequences of that chicanery and oppression which covetousness is sure to generate, and Providence sooner or later to punish. C.

CHAPTER XVI. Ver. 1. Every right inclination, thought, or purpose in the heart, and all right management of our words, come through an active faith in God. 2. Ignorance and self-conceit make men often to think themselves faultless and holy in their conduct, when the Lord, who searches and judges the intentions and frame of the heart, finds it quite otherwise. 3. Commit whatever works you undertake to the direction and management of God in his providence, and implore his blessing therein, so shall your honest desires be accomplished. 4. God made and would bring men to his own service, and for the manifestation of his glorious perfections; yea, even the wicked to be instruments of his righteous will, and at last the objects of it, by continuing in their impieties. 5. When men are inwardly proud on account of their gifts, honours, or wealth, God sees them, and will certainly punish them in their pride. 6. By God's exercise of his mercy and faithfulness in giving his Son, and fulfilling his promises, men's iniquity is expiated, pardoned, and subdued; and even by their exercise of mercy, equity, and fidelity, the punishment of sin in outward calamities is often prevented. And by the fear of God implanted in the heart, and a continued holy regard to his law, men hate, watch against, and avoid sin; and so escape the fearful consequences of it. 7. When a man makes it his habitual and earnest endeavour to receive Christ, and walk in him soberly, righteously, and godly, the Lord, or his God reconciled in Christ, inclines even those who were his foes to become his friends. 8. A small estate honestly gotten and cheerfully enjoyed, is preferable to vast incomes heaped up by oppression and kept without hospitality. 9. A man's mind fixes its end, contrives the means, and perhaps reckons upon the success: but the Lord determines the event, and orders every motion and step taken towards it. 10. The edicts, commands, and decisions of kings ought always to be directed by the unerring law of God; and their decisions ought to be so just and exact, that no man may be wronged thereby. 11. The Lord requires that, even in our private dealings, everything, even the smallest, should be managed with the most scrupulous integrity and equity. 12. Kings, being in the most exalted station, ought to be distinguished patterns of piety and virtue, and to countenance it in others, as the only security of their throne. 13. Kings ought highly to value and love sincere and faithful advisers, who truly inform them of what tends to their own and their kingdom's welfare. 14. The wrath of a king is almost as terrifying as a message of death, and, especially in despotic governments, often issues in death to its object: but virtuous and prudent courtiers will pacify it, and make a reconciliation. 15. The favours and gracious smiles of a prince are extremely reviving and comfortable, and fruitful of expected happiness, especially to such as he had been formerly incensed against. 16. But real religion, and a solid understanding to discern between good and evil, are preferable to all the wealth that kings can bestow or industry procure. 17. It is the constant aim and endeavour of upright men to decline everything that is evil, and to follow that which is good: and by heedful care of their thoughts, words, and actions, their souls and bodies are, through the grace and providence of God, preserved from destruction. 18. Pride and haughtiness are the ordinary forerunners of debasement and misery, and the means of bringing it on men. 19. It is better, in imitation of Christ and his dear saints, to submit to the meanest condition, and patiently to bear injuries, than to partake of victories, spoil, and wealth along with the proud. 20. They who understand business thoroughly, and manage it prudently and discreetly, bid fair to have good success; but it is only by trusting in God that true and everlasting happiness can be obtained. 21. They whose heart is well furnished with experimental knowledge of God's Word, take the proper method to obtain a high reputation for wisdom and prudence; and if they can with eloquence and clearness communicate their instructions, it will greatly tend to the edification of others. 22. Spiritual knowledge and grace are the beginning and earnest of eternal life, are comfortable to him who enjoys them, and useful to others: but the learning of fools is frivolous and vain; and even their instructions do but render men foolish. 23, 24. The enlightened mind of a wise man instructs him to speak judiciously and pertinently, gives weight of evidence to what he says, and renders it pleasant to the hearer, as a honeycomb is to the mouth, and nourishing and strengthening as marrow is to the bones. 25. Many are highly pleased with their own ways, even when they are such as tend to their ruin, spiritual, temporal, and eternal. 26. He that, prompted by his wants, labours in worldly employments, procures his own preservation in life: whereas he who labours in plaguing others, will find even every evil word tend to his own hurt. 27. Wicked men, with great pains, contrive and labour to do mischief, as if treasures could be gained by it: and their lying, slanderous, and insolent speeches are very injurious, painful, and destructive. 28. Persons of a perverse, passionate, and contentious spirit raise dissensions among those who are inclined to live at peace; and they who secretly defame, backbite, detract, and whisper about false stories, make breaches between the kindest neighbours and dearest relations. 29, 30. Such as are eager to do mischief, or live by violence and rapine, not content to do wrong themselves, entice others to become their companions, and then lead them into the most pernicious courses. With profound study they contrive the ruin of others; and 6 By[i] mercy and truth iniquity is purged;[5] and by the fear of the LORD men depart from evil.

7 When[j] a man's ways please the LORD, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.

8 Better[k] is a little with righteousness, than great revenues without right.

9 A[l] man's heart deviseth his way: but the LORD directeth his steps.

10 A[n] divine sentence[6] is in the lips of the king; his mouth transgresseth not in judgment.

11 A[o] just weight and balance are the LORD's: all the weights[7] of the bag are his work.

12 It[p] is an abomination to kings to commit wickedness: for the throne is established by righteousness.

13 Righteous[q] lips are the delight of kings;[8] and they love him that speaketh right.

14 The[r] wrath of a king is as messengers of [9]death: [s]but a wise man will pacify it.

15 In[t] the light of the king's countenance is life; and his favour is as a cloud of the latter rain.

16 How[u] much better is it to get wisdom than gold? and to get understanding rather to be chosen than silver?

17 The[v] highway of the upright is to depart from evil: [z]he that keepeth his way preserveth his soul.

18 Pride[y] goeth before destruction; and an haughty spirit before a fall.

19 Better[z] it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud.

20 He that handleth a matter[1] wisely shall find good; and whoso [a]trusteth in the LORD, happy is he.

21 The[b] wise in heart shall be called prudent; and the sweetness of the lips increaseth learning.

22 Understanding[c] is a well-spring of life unto him that hath it: [d]but the instruction of fools is folly.

23 The[e] heart of the wise teacheth[2] his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips.

24 Pleasant[g] words are as an honey-comb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones.

25 There[h] is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of [3]death.

26 He that [4]laboureth, [4]laboureth for himself; for his mouth craveth it of him.[5]

27 An[j] ungodly man[6] diggeth up evil; and in his lips there is as a burning fire.

28 A[k] froward man soweth[7] strife; and a whisperer separateth chief friends.

29 A[l] violent man enticeth his neighbour, and leadeth him into the way that is not good.

30 He[n] shutteth his eyes to devise froward things; moving his lips he bringeth evil to pass.

31 The[o] hoary head is a crown of glory, if it be found [p]in the way of righteousness.

32 He[q] that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; [r]and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.

33 The[s] lot is cast into the lap; but the whole disposing thereof is of the LORD.[8]

CHAPTER XVII.

BETTER is [a]a dry morsel,[1] and quietness therewith, than an house full of [2]sacrifices[3] with strife.

2 A wise servant shall have rule over [b]a son that causeth shame, and shall have part of the inheritance among the brethren.

* 'This doubtless refers to the manner in which execution was, and still is, in the East, performed upon persons who were high enough to incur the immediate wrath of the king. This may be explained by an account of the usage in Persia. When the king has determined on the death of a governor of a province, an order for his execution is made out, sealed with the royal signet, and consigned to an officer appointed for the purpose. This man rides post. Then, presenting himself to the principal person of the place, he shows the royal mandate, and forces the individual to accompany him, and lend his assistance. He enters the house of the condemned, walks straight up to his victim, places the warrant in the hands of his witness; then, drawing his scimitar, he strikes off his head' (Kitto).—P.

then, by their advice, or giving of the sign, it is furiously effected.—33. Events appear fortuitous, as the lot which is cast into the lap of a garment or into a hollow vessel: but all things are regulated by exact law; and nothing, at least in nature, happens but according to his eternal mind, and by the particular regulation of his will.

Ver. 1. Various changes of translation have been proposed in this verse, all tending to say that 'man hath the disposing of the heart,' but the answer, or power to answer with the tongue, is from the Lord. But by whatever authorities supported, these changes are certainly to be rejected; for surely the thoughts of the heart are as much in the hand of God as are the answers of the tongue. The translation of Holden is to be preferred: 'The deliberations of the heart in man, and the utterance of the tongue, are from Jehovah.' C.

Ver. 4. The wicked for the day of evil. It does not mean that God created the wicked on purpose to condemn them eternally. God created man upright, and for his own glory; man, by the abuse of his free will, 'fell from the estate wherein he was created,' and the finally impenitent God hath appointed to a righteous sentence in the day of final judgment.' 'The evil day for the evil-doer.' C.

Ver. 10. Such a sentence is ever in the lips of Christ the King in Zion; and such should ever be in the lips of earthly kings, who, whether they know it and regard it or not, reign by him and for him, and stand accountable as stewards at his awful throne of judgment. C.

Ver. 12. The throne is established by righteousness. A throne may be upheld by unjust war, usurpation, and oppression; but can be established in peace, prosperity, and permanence by righteousness alone. C.

Ver. 15. A cloud of the latter rain. 'The cloud of the latter rain,' promising gentle showers, was considered as the promise of an abundant harvest. C.

Ver. 21. Graceful, unaffected, and earnest speech will induce others to listen and learn.—Note, While speech, both in thought and manner, is truly a gift, it is the duty of every Christian to improve what he possesses, so as to commend the truth first to the ear, and then to the heart of men. A careless utterance, with an ungainly and offensive action, are, in public instructors, not always mere defects, but may be sins—sins of neglect, which cannot be palliated, and should not be defended. C.

Ver. 26. Work was prescribed to man even in innocence, Ge. 2:15, but toil was inflicted as a curse on sin. Yet such is the mercy of God that want, by its imperative demands upon industry, and even toil, counteracts a thousand greater evils that abundance and luxury would infallibly entail. C.

Ver. 31. Way of righteousness. That is, following and longing after Jesus, the Lord our only righteousness. C.

CHAPTER XVII. Ver. 1. The meanest fare, enjoyed in peace with God and our neighbour, and with quietness in our own mind, is better than the most sumptuous cheer, attended with brawling, contention, and strife. 2. A pious and prudent servant ought to be preferred to a foolish and wicked child, and deserves a share of the inheritance in a family. 3. As gold and silver are tried and purified in the fire, so the Lord, who searches the hearts of all men, proves and refines his own people from their sinful dross in the furnace of affliction.—6. It is an honour to parents to have a numerous posterity walking in holiness and virtue; and it is the honour of children to have pious and prudent ancestors.—8. Presents and bribes appear so lovely and tempting, that few can refuse them, or decline gratifying the desire of the giver. 9. Overlooking of injuries, and mutual forbearance, is the best way to preserve and increase friendship and love: but repeating old faults breaks the strictest bonds of friendship, and makes an irreconcilable separation.—11. Some men are so wilful and refractory, that, shaking off all reverence to God and their superiors, they are wholly and irreclaimably bent on mischief; they must therefore be cut off by some exemplary punishment. 12. It is less dangerous to meet a bear in the heat of his rage, than a furious fool in the pursuit of his unruly passions and desires.—14. When men begin a quarrel, it gradually becomes more and more violent and extensive, till it is with difficulty made up: it is best therefore to check and stifle all contentions in the beginning. 16. In his mysterious providence, God gives to many foolish persons natural abilities, worldly substance, and opportunities of learning wisdom; and yet gives them no sense or inclination to desire it. 17. A true friend continues constant in his affection and usefulness, however our circumstances alter: and a brother, who deserves the name, is especially kind and helpful in a time of adversity. 18. He is extremely foolish whose kindness hurries him into rash suretiship for the debts of others, especially when they are suspected of knavery. 19. He certainly loves wickedness who accustoms himself to brawling and contention: and he who carries himself proudly, scornfully, and contemptuously towards others, lives above his estate, and builds sumptuous houses, hurries himself into ruin; and breakers of the public peace open wide the flood-gates to all impiety. 20. A man of wicked devices, which he resolves to accomplish by any means, shall find himself deceived in his expectations of good: and a false, deceitful, and self-inconsistent tongue will prove the ruin of its owner. 22. Nothing more conduces to health than solid quietness of conscience, and a moderate cheerfulness of spirit: but excessive sadness and grief waste the body, and dry it up to a mere skeleton. 23. Many wicked persons, who would refuse an open bribe, will willingly enough take bribes or presents secretly, in order to influence them to give counsel or judgment contrary to law and equity. 24. A pious and prudent man has his mind fixed upon the unerring oracles of God, and has his sense and wisdom at hand to guide and govern him; but a foolish one has his thoughts always wandering and roving about impertinences, and is never in CHAPTER XVIII.

THROUGH desire[a] a man having separated himself, seeketh and intermeddleth with all wisdom.[1]

2 A[b] fool hath no delight in understanding, but that his heart may discover itself.[2]

3 When[c] the wicked cometh, then cometh also contempt, and with ignominy reproach.

4 The[d] words of a man's mouth are as deep any fixed or serious temper.—27. The more wise and knowing a man is, he is the less apt to be talkative, speaking only what is fit and necessary; and his wisdom renders his mind and temper humble, calm, temperate, and dispassionate. 28. So great a virtue it is to be duly silent, that if even a foolish person restrain his lips from rash and impertinent talk, he is for the time reckoned a wise and intelligent person.

Ver. 5. It is the poor man who is referred to in both clauses of this verse; consequently the second clause might be translated as follows:—'He that rejoiceth at his adversity (the adversity of the poor man) shall not be held innocent.' How often does one hear the remark made in regard to those who have fallen from affluence to poverty, 'He deserves it.' 'It is a righteous judgment upon his pride, or his folly,' &c.! It is such observations, and the spirit which prompts them, that are here condemned. P.

Ver. 7. Excellent speech becometh not a fool. Bandits often talk highly of generosity—the desert-robber deifies hospitality—gamesters speak of debts of honour—the murderous Pharisees talked scrupulously of the Sabbath—the monks of the dark ages, while they absorbed half the riches of Europe, extolled the virtue of poverty—and popes, while domineering alike over the vassal and his lord, called themselves, in high-sounding and affected humility, 'the servants of the servants of God.' Such is 'excellent speech' in the lips of 'fools,' who demonstrate their folly by affecting to admire some solitary, convenient, and advantageous virtue, while professedly immersed in open and destructive vice. C.

Ver. 14. Leave off contention in argument about vain, useless, and irrelevant matters, before strife be 'meddled with' at all; for the beginning of strife—not matter of argument, but of temper—is the breaking down of a water mound, that you may easily demolish, but may be totally unable to repair. C.

Ver. 17. The love of brother to brother is a natural feeling. Except where sin or passion interfere to overcome or deaden natural affection, a man will never see a near relative wronged without making an attempt to defend him. It is not only the duty of a kinsman to help his kinsman in trouble, but it is the inherent and natural tendency of his mind. Instinct, in fact, prompts to it. P.

Ver. 25. The sorrows inflicted upon fathers and mothers by foolish children are not here (and in ver. 21) enumerated as evils in which the parents have no share; but as warnings against the neglect of a wise and godly education, and against the infusion of vanity, self-conceit, and pride into the hearts of children, whereby so many parents literally convert them into fools. C.

Ver. 27. A man of understanding is of an excellent spirit. And being of an 'excellent spirit,' he is contented to listen to what he hears; to feed upon his own thoughts, and not to intrude his opinions until love and duty absolutely require him to speak. C.

CHAPTER XVIII. Ver. 1. While self-conceited persons seek to distinguish themselves by their high pretences to wisdom, and inconstant ones seek but never find satisfaction, they who have a true desire of knowledge disengage themselves from all avocations, in order to study true wisdom. 2. A vain man studies knowledge or even religion, for no other end but to make a show with it. 3. Wherever wicked men come, they bring their contempt of God and reproaching of religion along with them, which will at last issue in contempt and misery to themselves. 4. A wise man's words, as deep waters, flow calmly, and contain the deep mysteries of God: and his heart, being full of wisdom, is ever sending forth streams of instructive, refreshing, quickening, and fructifying influences to all around him. 5. It is exceeding great wickedness to pervert justice, and, through favour or interest, to connive at and acquit the wicked, or to give the cause against a righteous man through prejudice or partiality. 6, 7. Fools, by meddling in other men's quarrels, or by speeches irritating others against them, procure mischief, and even lasting and eternal ruin to themselves. 8. The slanders and reproaches of tale-bearers, however covered over with pretences of sorrow, and however greedily they be received by the hearers, like mortal and incurable wounds, pierce to and rankle the very heart. 9. Idleness and prodigality are nearly allied, and both issue in the ruin of the persons guilty of them. Negligence about our soul is as fatal as open and avowed ungodliness. 10. Jesus Christ, and all the perfections, promises, and providences of God in him, are an impregnable defence and satisfaction to all such as by faith flee to him: no enemy then can ever hurt them. 11. It is only in his own conceit that the rich man's wealth appears a mean of remarkable safety either here or hereafter. 12. Pride in prosperity, forgetfulness of God, and despising of others, are certain means and forerunners of destruction: and humility, meekness, and patience, in a low condition, are the best preparation for honour and preferment. 13. He who, to show his quick parts, or through a forwardness of temper, answers to a matter before he hears it fully and understands it, shames himself, and manifests his folly. 14. A manly spirit, especially if encouraged and supported by the influences of the Holy Ghost, will bear up under manifold and sore calamities of an external kind: but if the spirit be wounded with melancholy dejection, and a sense of God's wrath, how insupportable is the case, till Jesus, by his blood and grace, give relief! 15. Prudent persons, by diligent meditation, and by attentive listening to instruction, labour to increase more and more in wisdom. 16. There are few men so mean, base, or wicked, but large gifts and presents will procure their release from prison, nay, bring them into favour with great men, or even to the honour of waiting upon princes. 17. They who are first in representing their case, ordinarily make it to appear right, and even prepossess the judge in their favour; but by diligent search into their allegations, their neighbours often find innumerable mistakes in their representations. 18. In some cases, where the parties contending are very powerful to maintain their pretensions, and the reasons strong on both sides, the referring of the determination to God by the lot is the proper method to put each into quiet possession of that which falls to his share. 19. No contentions are so sharp and obstinate as those between near relations and long-continued friends. It is easier to take strong cities, or to bow or break the strongest iron bars, than to make a reconciliation. 20. Great care ought to be taken about our words; for, according as they are wholesome, good, and edifying, or are bad and unsavoury, shall be our temporal or eternal reward for them. 21. Much evil, or much good, necessarily issues from the right or wrong use of our tongues: and as men love and accustom themselves to good or bad discourse, shall be their reward or punishment; nay, ordinarily, they who love to talk much shall suffer by it. 22. To be provided with a pious, prudent, and active wife is a great blessing, and a singular instance of God's favour. 23. Not boldness, but modest entreaties and doleful supplications, become those who are poor and miserable: but rich men are too apt to be so elated with their outward circumstances, as to return haughty and harsh answers. 24. Such as have friends must study to behave towards them in a friendly manner, in doing them all good offices possible: and sometimes friends are found that will be more constant and faithful in helping us in the day of affliction than our nearest relations.

HANGMAN'S TREE, DAMASCUS. [Proverbs, xviii.]—David conquered and garrisoned the city of Damascus during his reign, and during a part of the reign of Solomon Damascus was under the dominion of Israel. The Proverbs of Solomon were written about one thousand years before Christ. We place this picture to illustrate the eighteenth chapter of Proverbs, because in some degree Damascus is connected with the beginning of the reign of Solomon in Israel. Damascus occupies the most beautiful site in Western Asia. It lies at the eastern pass of Anti-Libanus in a vast plain of great fertility, watered by the Abana and Pharpar rivers. In the center of this plain, which without the rivers would be an arid desert, in the midst of dense masses of foliage, there glisten the minarets from the mosques of Damascus. Seen at a distance it looks like a dream, a vision starting up from the desert.

Ver. 1. Through desire of real knowledge, a man having separated himself from secular business, seeks, not some solitary department of study, but expatiates over all subjects, as did Solomon; for by the student of real knowledge, every subject is found to lead to the knowledge and the love of God, and in that all wisdom lies. C.

Ver. 3. When the wicked cometh into notice, office, or power, then cometh, it may be, the adulation of fools and flatterers—but the contempt of wise men, with an ignominious end to his vain pretensions, and the reproach of those he has injured, deceived, or betrayed. C.

Ver. 16. The invariable custom in Asiatic countries in approaching superiors is to present a gift. Here it is to be viewed as the emblem of that name and righteousness with which alone the sinner can find access to the throne of grace. C.

CHAPTER XIX. Ver. 1. A poor, honest, and upright man is much more happy and honourable, than a rich wicked man that makes no conscience either of speaking or acting in a wise or gracious manner. 2. When a man is ignorant, not knowing what to follow or what to avoid, he cannot become holy or happy. And he who in a rash and unadvised manner pursues his purpose, cannot fail to commit many sinful blunders. 3. When a man's ignorance and wickedness have made him miscarry, he often blames the providence of God, and frets and murmurs against him. 4. When men grow rich, they are sure to have many courting their favour, and professing themselves their hearty friends; but when they become poor and need friends, even those who were formerly kind turn their backs on them. 5. False witnesses and private calumniators shall at last, however slowly, meet with the due punishment of their wickedness. 6, 7. Multitudes will court the favour of the great and liberal who can enrich or advance them; but everybody is apt to desert and contemn the poor who need and beg their assistance. 8. He that receives Christ learns the true knowledge of God; and he who strictly practises the direction of his Word, shows a real regard to his own soul, and shall obtain the spiritual and eternal blessings which he needs.—10. Not plenty, prosperity, or pleasure, but rather stripes, are fit for fools: and much less is it proper for slaves to be able wantonly to domineer over princes and men of great wealth or honour. 11. It is an evidence of great wisdom to be slow to anger: and it is a great honour kindly to pass over injuries, and return good for evil. 12. The frowns and wrath of a king are very terrible to his subjects, and make them apprehensive

* The antithesis in this verse is not well brought out in the present rendering. Probably the true meaning is as follows: —'The desire of a man (that which he longs for when in distress or poverty) is his relief (the assistance or alms calculated to satisfy his wants or save him from impending calamities); but (still) the poor man (who is thus forced to beg and of ruin; but the tokens of his favour greatly refresh and invigorate their spirits. 13. An ignorant, headstrong, and impious son is a plague and grief to his parents; and a contentious wife is a gradual ruin to her family, so perpetually vexing her husband that he can scarcely live with her. 14. Persons may have houses and riches left them by parents; but a prudent wife is not obtained, even by diligent care, without the peculiar direction and blessing of the Lord. 15. Sloth and idleness sink the mind into a dull stupidity and unconcern, and thereby reduce men to extreme beggary and want. 16. He who carefully keeps the commandments of God as the rule of his life, secures the welfare of his own soul: but he that lives at random, led only by his own brutish inclinations, shall be miserable in time and in eternity. 17. He who compassionately relieves the necessities of the poor really enriches himself; as what he gives is but lent to the Lord, and shall be repaid, with large interest and increase of blessings, upon him and his posterity. 18. Children ought to be faithfully corrected before they are fixed in evil habits and customs; nor ought their cryings or entreaties make parents abate the necessary severity towards them. 19. Men given to passion and fury bring themselves into great mischiefs: and if we extricate them out of one danger, they will quickly involve themselves in another. 20. To listen to instruction, and kindly receive reproofs, or even corrections, is the proper way to attain much solid and lasting wisdom and experience. 21. Many are the purposes and contrivances of men, and they often lay them with great care: but it is only the will of the Lord which is able to bring to pass whatsoever is best. 22. A desire to do good to others is a real kindness to them, though it be not in our power to effect it. And a poor man who would fain do us good, is better than one who promises much and does little. 23. True godliness, and a religious care to please the Lord in all things, increase a spiritual life, and issue in life eternal. They afford the most satisfying comfort in God's favour, produce the most agreeable contentment with our lot, and are an excellent preservative both from sin and from suffering. 24. Sluggards are so much given to laziness and idle sauntering, that they can hardly be persuaded to take their meat or do the most necessary and easy things. 25. Incorrigible sinners, and particularly scoffers at religion and despisers of reproof, ought to be severely punished, as a warning to such as are inconsiderate; but such as are wise and prudent will need no more but a gentle reproof to make them learn their duty and practise accordingly. 26. Children, who by their debaucheries waste their father's substance and deal unkindly with their mother, disgrace their parents, and at last render themselves infamous and miserable. 27. Great care ought to be taken to avoid listening to false doctrine, sinful advice, or even idle and frothy language, as it tends to make us wander from the true doctrines of Christ and practice of holiness. 28. An impious witness, whose conscience is so hardened that he can swear to anything, laughs at all law and justice, and even at the threatened judgment of God upon perjured persons: and the mouth of the wicked utters the most false, sinful, and mischievous speeches with greediness. 29. But terrible judgments shall certainly be inflicted upon those that scoff at conscience and religion; and indelible marks of God's displeasure shall be inflicted on those who slight good instructions.

Ver. 2. He that hasteth with his feet sinneth. He that hasteth with his feet, without judging by his head—who, more forward than thoughtful—must end in sin. C.

Ver. 3. Fretteth against the Lord. The elephant, the rhinoceros, the lion, and the tiger are often inclosed within cages. When wild they fret and strive, but soon learn that resistance is vain and submission good; but unrenewed man, less wise than 'the beasts that perish,' fretteth against the Lord, and striveth to the end against his Maker. Grace alone can teach him to say, 'Let the Lord do what seemeth him good:' 'Thy will be done on earth as in heaven.' C.

Ver. 7. The word 'hate' must evidently be understood in the comparative sense of Lu. 14. 26. And where poverty arises from idleness, indiscretion, or wastefulness, the coldness of brethren and friends, so far from being criminal, may be a righteous judgment and retribution. In other cases, however, it may indicate a criminal want of sympathy; and in the case of Christ Jesus our Lord, was exhibited in the highest form of guiltiness. Had our Lord come in riches, splendour, and earthly pride, the Pharisees would have worshipped him whom they bought and crucified. C.

Ver. 13. Dropping. The dropping of water through the flat roofs of eastern houses must have been a common occurrence. It would bring (1) a disagreeable noise; (2) defilement of furniture and dress; (3) in the end rottenness; (4) disease. C.

Ver. 19. An ill-tempered man will, in the end, come to punishment; for though his friend deliver him again and again, he will at last offend beyond all power of apology or intercession. C.

Ver. 22. Kindness. The most amiable quality is kindness. With it a man of inferior mental attainments is esteemed; without it the highest accomplishments can never secure esteem or confidence. C.

Ver. 24. His bosom. Rather 'in the dish,' meaning that out of which the Orientals eat with the hand. See Mat. xxiii. The meaning is the slothful, even when his hand is filled with opportunities and means of success, will not lift up his hand to provide for his own support. C.

CHAPTER XX. Ver. 1. Immoderate drinking of wine, or other intoxicating liquors, exposes men to the jest and detestation of others; it makes themselves abusive and scurrilous, mocking even at sacred things, and renders them like fools, sots, or madmen, furious, tumultuous, and quarrelsome: while it seems to exhilarate the spirits, it deceitfully drowns both reason and conscience, and tends to the ruin of both soul and

CHAPTER XXI.

THE king's[a] heart is in the hand of the LORD, as the rivers of water:[1] he turneth it whithersoever he will.

2 Every[b] way of a man is right in his own eyes: [c]but the LORD pondereth the hearts.

3 To[d] do justice and judgment is more acceptable to the LORD than sacrifice.[2]

4 An[e] high look,[3] and a proud heart, and the ploughing[4] of the wicked,[5] is sin.

5 The[g] thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteousness; but of every one that is hasty, only to want.

6 The[h] getting of treasures by a lying tongue is a vanity tossed to and fro of them that seek death.[6]

7 The[i] robbery of the wicked shall destroy them;[7] because they refuse to do judgment.

8 The[j] way of man is froward and strange: [k]but as for the pure, his work is right.

9 It[l] is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top,[8] than with a brawling woman[9] in a wide house.[1]

10 The[n] soul of the wicked desireth evil: his neighbour findeth no favour[2] in his eyes.

11 When[o] the scorner is punished, the simple is made wise; and when the wise is instructed, he receiveth knowledge.

12 The[p] righteous man wisely considereth the house of the wicked: [q]but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedness.

13 Whoso[r] stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard.

14 A[s] gift in secret pacifieth anger; and a reward in the bosom strong wrath.

15 It[t] is joy to the just to do judgment: [u]but destruction shall be to the workers of iniquity.

16 The[v] man that wandereth out of the way body. 2. The just wrath of a king is terrible: and they that offend him, by exasperating language or behaviour, expose themselves to temporal and lasting ruin. 3. It is honourable to avoid contention to the utmost, and to get out of it as quickly as possible, by confessing our own faults, and forgiving those of our neighbours: but foolish and wicked persons are always ready to begin or maintain quarrels. 4. Such as, through indolence and self-indulgence, neglect their business in its proper season, may expect beggary and misery; while they who are diligent enjoy abundant felicity. 5. Some men, through their reservedness of temper, and others through deep design, conceal their intentions: but persons of great sagacity will discover them, or even by their artful insinuations make themselves to declare them. 6. Most men will boast how friendly, humane, charitable, and generous they are: but it is hard to find one answerable in deeds to his trust, his relation, his promises, or pretences. 7. Justified and gracious persons, by their practice, manifest the sincerity of their heart and profession; and their children are blessed of God and regarded by men on their account. 8. A king who makes it his business to execute judgment and justice faithfully, effectually suppresses crimes and impieties by his strict inspection of affairs. 9. No man on earth is perfectly free from sin in heart or life, nor can he make himself so. 10. To buy with larger weights or measures, and sell with lesser ones, and all other injustice, is extremely detestable to God. 11. Men's continued practice is the surest mark of their disposition, and by that the future conversation of young persons may be guessed at; and yet they, even children, often strangely conceal their vices. 12. All our natural faculties and senses, and the right use of them, are from God, and therefore ought to be employed for his glory. 13. Immoderate sleep, or other slothfulness, wastes our time and draws on poverty and want: but watchful care and diligent labours are the means of obtaining everything necessary. 14. Some, while they buy goods, will dishonestly and falsely cry them down, and yet afterwards boast of their good bargain and cheating the seller. 15. Wise and gracious speeches, proceeding from a wise and understanding heart, are more valuable than all the gold, pearls, or precious things on earth. 16. Never trust him, without a proper pledge, who rashly becomes surety for everybody, strangers and harlots not excepted; for he will quickly be reduced to beggary. 17. Gains, honours, and pleasures, acquired by unrighteous courses, may at first be extremely agreeable to men; but they will at last produce anguish of conscience, pangs of repentance, or torments of despair. 18. Deliberation with ourselves, and consulting with others who are prudent, is the way to obtain success in our undertakings, especially in matters of importance and danger. 19. It is always necessary to suspect flatterers, and to turn a deaf ear to tale-bearers, who, by treacherously revealing the secrets which others have intrusted to them, labour to insinuate themselves into our confidence, and then betray us. 20. Slighters, revilers, abusers, and wishers of mischief to parents, bring fearful and lasting ruin on themselves and posterity, however they may prosper for a time. 21. Many, by unrighteous courses, quickly become rich: but the foundation being laid in rapine, extortion, or fraud, it shall quickly waste away, or prove a curse to such as enjoy it. 22. Never revenge injuries received; but commit thy cause to God who judges righteously; wait patiently in the use of lawful means for the fulfilment of his promises, and he will vindicate and deliver thee in his own time. 23. Injustice, even in the smallest things, is so extremely abominable to God, that it cannot be too much hated or avoided. 24. Men's thoughts, words, and actions are all directed by God to his own ends: and none can certainly know beforehand what will be the issue of them. 25. A sacrilegious converting of what pertains to God to our own private use, and studying how to be loosed from the obligations of solemn vows, terribly ensnare men's souls, and bring certain ruin upon them. 26. Pious and prudent magistrates exert themselves to discourage and terrify the wicked, and punish them with proper severity. 27. The rational soul and conscience, especially when renewed by the Spirit of God, act as his deputies; discovering, judging, accusing, or approving whatever passes within us, according as it is contrary or conformable to God's revealed will. 28. Bounty and clemency, joined with justice and faithfulness to their of understanding shall remain in the congregation of the dead.

17 He[w] that loveth pleasure[3] shall be a poor man: he that loveth wine and oil shall not be rich.[4]

18 The[y] wicked shall be a ransom for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright.[5]

19 It[z] is better to dwell in the wilderness,[6] than with a contentious and an angry woman.

20 There[a] is treasure to be desired and oil in the dwelling of the wise: [b]but a foolish man spendeth it up.

21 He[c] that followeth after righteousness and mercy findeth life, righteousness, and honour.

22 A[d] wise man scaleth the city of the mighty, and casteth down the strength of the confidence thereof.

23 Whoso[e] keepeth his mouth and his tongue keepeth his soul from troubles.

24 Proud[f] and haughty scorner is his name who dealeth in proud wrath.[7] word, are principal means of securing the government of princes, and entailing their kingdom on their posterity. 29. Strength, vigour, and courage render young men respected, but gravity, wisdom, and experience are the peculiar ornaments of the aged. 30. Severe corrections are necessary to restrain or reclaim some stubborn and obstinate tempers, and to purge out those corrupt affections which are lodged in the heart.

Ver. 6. Generosity is much more common than fidelity; ostentation of generosity more common still. Fidelity to man is not uncommon in the sense of honesty; but in the sense of love, admonition, rebuke, and prayer, how seldom is it to be found! Above all, while men glory in their generosity with the gifts of God, who is faithful in service to the Giver? C.

Ver. 10. This is not confined to mere commercial integrity, but embraces all relative duties, whether between ourselves and our neighbours, or ourselves and God. Take one of the latter, as one of the most neglected, because spiritual and invisible. We expect gratitude of men for all our kindness; do we similarly weigh and measure our gratitude to God? We ask forgiveness of him daily for all our trespasses; do we employ the same weight and measure towards them that trespass against us? C.

Ver. 16. Never place confidence in a thoughtless fool who pledges his word, character, or credit for a stranger who has inveigled him. Above all, never trust an abandoned libertine, who, being 'joined to an harlot,' is dissevered from Christ, 1 Co. 6. 15, 16; and who, careless about his own soul, will never be faithful to your interest farther than he is bound by ties of law, and constrained by its compulsions. C.

Ver. 27. The thoughts of the natural man are chiefly directed to 'what he shall eat and what he shall drink,' Lu. 12. 22, 30; nay, his 'god is his belly,' Phi. 3. 19. But the spirit of the renewed man is the candle of the Lord, searching out and mortifying all the deeds of the body that the soul may live. C.

Ver. 30. The blueness of a wound, &c. Some wounds do occasionally assume a bluish tinge; but it is always an unhealthy symptom, and unfavourable to healing. The word 'blueness' should rather be rendered suppuration, which brings the description into accordance with the ordinary process of healing. C.

CHAPTER XXI. Ver. 1. The wills, inclinations, and purposes of kings and others, are entirely under the eye and observation of God: and he would turn them into right paths as surely as the gardener or husbandman manages his canals of water. 2. Men, through their self-love, often fancy their own purposes and works to be extremely right; while the Lord, who perfectly knows their hearts, observes them to be very defective or sinful. 3. Uprightness of heart, and holiness and virtue of life, are more pleasing to God than the most pompous devotions or the most liberal benefactions or alms. 4. Not only the insolence, pride, and ambition of wicked men are criminal before God, but all their natural, civil, and moral actions, and all their worldly greatness and prosperity lead to sin; and all they do is sinful in its principle, manner, and end. 5. Prudent contrivances and laborious industry are the proper means of plenty and affluence: but hasty resolutions, precipitant measures, and unjust methods involve men in trouble and loss. 6. The getting of wealth by lying, flattery, calumny, or perjury, is a beguiling and unprofitable course, however much used by such as walk in ways leading to destruction; and the wealth thus obtained is as unsubstantial and transient as heaps of chaff or clouds of smoke before the wind. 7. The injuries which wicked men do to others, in rendering their families poor or desolate, shall, in most ruinous punishments, be returned upon their own heads, because they are wilfully bent upon their unjust dealings. 8. The whole temper and course of a wicked man are contrary to the law and nature of God, and odious to him: but they whose consciences are washed in Jesus' blood, and their hearts renewed by his grace, walk in good works, acceptable to God and profitable to men. 9. Better is it to live poorly and solitary in the open air, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, or to be thrust into some little corner, than have a spacious house and numerous family governed by a contentious wife, whose perpetual scolding and brawling, on the smallest occasion, is more intolerable than thunder, lightning, or blustering winds. 10. A wicked man's heart desires to be ever doing mischief, and to have others falling into it: nor will he spare good or bad, friend or foe, if, by reproof or otherwise, they stand in the way of his covetousness, ambition, or other lusts. 11. When obstinate scoffers at the laws of God and men are punished in providence or by the magistrates; others, particularly such as they have seduced, will bethink themselves what they are doing: and wise men will improve instructions and admonitions, to render themselves wiser and better. 12. While righteous magistrates search the houses of the wicked for ill-gotten goods, and in order that they may be duly punished and deprived of power to do further mischief, godly men, in order to deter them from like courses, consider the judgment and ruin which God brings on the wicked for their sins. 13. They who refuse to help the poor in distress shall be reduced to misery themselves, and have none to pity or help them. 14. Presents, especially if secretly and prudently given, have a powerful influence to appease angry and wrathful men. 15. The execution of justice, and the practice of holiness and virtue, are a pleasure to the righteous; but are a terror and burden to the wicked, whom God and the magistrates shall concur to destroy. 16. He that will not live according to the directions of God's Word, but follows the conduct of his own lusts and passions, shall, after all his extravagances, be for ever fixed in hell. 17. Voluptuous persons destroy their own pleasures by wasting their estates; and they who are given to costly and delicious feeding can never thrive. 18. Wicked men often fall into the very miseries which they had prepared for the godly; and in times of common calamity are often severely punished that the righteous may be delivered. 20. True wisdom enables men to procure what is necessary for their families, and to enjoy it with satisfaction; but foolish persons lavishly waste what they neither know how to get or how to live without. 21. They who make it their business to receive and improve Jesus Christ and his righteousness and grace, in a life of holiness and virtue, shall find every new-covenant blessing in time and eternity. 22. Wise men, by their prudence, kindness, and perseverance, can effect the most difficult enterprises, and do more than others who have much more strength. 23. Restraint of the tongue from impure, false, profane, rash, injurious language, greatly preserves men from troubles, embarrassments, and miseries. 24. Pride, insolence, and outrageous words only render men infamous and contemptible. 25, 26. The slothful man is killed by an insatiable desire after that which he has not and will not labour for; but pious and diligent persons have enough for themselves, and also wherewith to relieve others. 27. All the appearances of devotion and piety about unrenewed persons being hypocritical, proceeding from a wicked principle, done in a wicked manner, and to a wicked end, are abominable to God. 28. The testimony, character, and soul of a false witness shall quickly be ruined: but he that speaks nothing but what he knows to be true, is fixed and invariable in his attestations. 29. Impenitent sinners refuse to blush at their abominations, and obstinately resolve to go on in them; but sincere saints carefully conduct their thoughts, words, and actions by the rule of God's Word. 30. No projects, however wisely laid or prudently conducted, can defeat or alter the purposes or counteract the providence of God. 31. Neither horses, chariots, nor powerful armies can obtain victories, or even protect their owners: but all safety and salvation are of and through faith in Christ himself.

Ver. 7. The robbery of the wicked shall destroy them. There are two views of the subject. (1) Several nations live by robbery, and reckon it an honourable employment. Yet, in the end, all such communities, like the piratical Algerines and murderous Thugs, are brought to destruction. (2) There is a robbery of God when he is defrauded of that worship, honour, and glory that are due to his name, which must finally terminate in the destruction of the guilty, Mal. 3. 9. C.

Ver. 13. Not 'he that stoppeth his ear at the importunity of the poor' is condemned, for that importunity is often the result of vice, idleness, or fraud; but he that disregards 'their cry' when it arises, as in a child, from want or pain that they cannot supply or relieve. C.

Ver. 22. Never did the world appear in a more hopeless state than a little before the dawn of the blessed Reformation. The human mind was enslaved to authority and tradition—an authority without charter from God, a tradition without name, till manufactured on emergency. The consciences of men were prostrate before the shrine of the confessional: their spirits were terrified into cowardly submission by the fires of an imaginary purgatory; and the walls of spiritual Babylon were high, as unto heaven. Yet these walls were scaled, and this city was taken, not by 'power nor by might,' but by a few 'wise men'—men 'made wise unto salvation' by the Scriptures (2 Ti. 3. 15), and strong and victorious by the Spirit of truth, and love, and holiness. C.

CHAPTER XXII. Ver. 1. A good character,

4 By[e] humility,[4] and the fear of the LORD, are riches, and honour, and life.

5 Thorns[g] and snares are in the way of the froward: he that doth keep his soul shall be far from them.

6 Train[h] up[5] a child in the way[6] he should go; and when he is old he will not depart from it.

7 The[i] rich ruleth over the poor; and the borrower is servant to the lender.[7]

8 He[j] that soweth iniquity shall reap vanity; and the rod of his anger shall fail.[8]

9 He[k] that hath a bountiful eye[9] shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor.

10 Cast[l] out the scorner, and contention shall go out; yea, strife and reproach shall cease.

11 He[n] that loveth pureness of heart, for the grace of his lips[1] the king shall be his friend.[2]

12 The[o] eyes of the LORD preserve knowledge; and he overthroweth the words[3] of the transgressor.

13 The[p] slothful man saith, There is a lion without, I shall be slain in the streets.[4]

14 The[q] mouth of strange women is a deep pit: he that is abhorred of the LORD shall fall therein.

15 Foolishness[r] is bound in the heart of a child; but the [s]rod of correction shall drive it far from him.

16 He[t] that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.

17 Bow[u] down thine ear, and hear the words of the wise, and apply thine heart unto my knowledge:

18 For[v] it is a pleasant thing if thou keep them within thee;[5] they shall withal be fitted in thy lips.[6]

19 That[w] thy trust may be in the LORD, I have made known to thee this day,[7] even to [8]thee.

20 Have[y] not I written to thee excellent things in counsels and knowledge,

21 That I might make thee know the certainty of the words of truth; that thou mightest answer the words of truth to them that send unto thee?[9]

22 Rob[z] not the poor, because he is [1]poor; [a]neither oppress the afflicted in the gate;

CHAPTER XXIII.

WHEN thou[a] sittest to eat with a ruler, consider diligently what is before thee:[1]

2 And[b] put a knife to thy throat,[2] if thou be a man given to appetite.

3 Be[c] not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat.[3]

4 Labour[d] not to be rich; [e]cease from thine own wisdom.

5 Wilt thou set thine eyes upon[4] that [g]which is not? for riches certainly make themselves wings; they fly away as an eagle toward heaven.

qualifying men to be useful for God in their generation, and the noted respect and friendship of those among whom we live, are more honourable and comfortable than all the riches of the world. 2. The rich by their wealth and the poor by their labour are mutual supports of each other, and ought to live together in harmony and kindness, as the same Lord made them both, and appointed them their respective conditions. 3. Prudent men foresee calamities or temptations when approaching, and use proper means for securing themselves; but foolish and inconsiderate persons go on securely in their sins and are ruined. 4. True humility and real godliness are the certain way to honour and happiness in this world and in that which is to come. 5. Wicked men meet with much trouble and danger in their sinful ways: but he that takes proper care of his soul shall be preserved therefrom, and enjoy manifold blessings. 6. Let children be carefully instructed in the truths and accustomed to the ways of God as early and earnestly as possible, and they will retain the impression, and practise the same, as long as they live. 7. Rich men domineer over the poor; and they who borrow are obliged to depend on the will and pleasure of the lender. 8. He whose common practice is to do mischief shall be paid in his own coin, with misery and trouble; and at length his power of wronging others shall be taken from him. 9. They who compassionately observe the wants of the poor, and cheerfully relieve them, shall be largely rewarded of God. 10. The removal of graceless persons, who scorn all good counsels, from a society, is an excellent mean to compose the contentions therein, and to prevent strifes and mutual reproaches for the future. 11. He that loves and practises sincerity and plain-heartedness, will recommend himself even to princes, by the piety, pleasantness, and candour of his discourse. 12. God, in his providence, carefully preserves his own oracles and ordinances among men, and provides for, preserves, and honours all who through faith are made wise unto salvation: but he overrules the counsels and designs of the wicked and perfidious. 13. Slothful persons imagine mighty hinderances in the way of their duty, where there are none, or at least very few. 14. Nothing is so dangerous, so eternally dangerous, as the ensnaring flatteries of whorish women, and the enslaving influence of fleshly lust. If a man be ensnared by them, nothing but infinite mercy and power can prevent his utter and everlasting destruction. And seldom are any, who have not provoked the Lord by former wickedness, permitted to fall into these snares. 15. False opinions and bad inclinations adhere so closely to the minds of children, that not only instructions and reproofs, but even seasonable and duly severe chastisements, must remove their obstinate folly. 16. He that by violence or fraud oppresses the poor to enrich himself, or gives to the rich what he took from the poor, or what he should give to relieve their wants, shall himself be reduced to want and beggary. 17. Attend diligently, and consider seriously, the counsels and precepts of wise men, and particularly those given in this book. 18. For it will afford thee great satisfaction heartily to embrace, thoroughly to digest, and faithfully to preserve them in thy mind: and by these means thou wilt be qualified to instruct others in them. 19. Men who are quick and dexterous, but prudent, in despatching whatever business is committed to them, are in a fair way to be preferred to some honourable employment in the service of their prince.

Ver. 7. The rich ruleth over the poor. This should not generate either tyranny in the one, or envy in the other. It is an arrangement of Providence for mutual good—the child that obeys is as much blessed as the parent that rules. And so, where rich and poor alike fear God, the poor is as happy as the rich. C.

Ver. 15. The rod of correction. Be it never forgotten by parents, that 'the rod' signifies not exclusively an instrument of punishment, but authority and power; and that 'correction' consequently is not confined to corporal punishment, but extended to every means by which the mind may be corrected by wise precept, godly example, or rational restraint. C.

Ver. 16. Giveth to the rich. Giveth bribes to the rich, as is common in eastern despotisms, to induce them to overlook and countenance his oppressions. The whole history of the pashalics of Western Asia is a striking commentary upon this important doctrine of sacred political economy. C.

Ver. 17. From ver. 17–21 there is either a preface to a new division of the book of Proverbs, or a conclusion from the foregoing instructions. The latter view seems most congenial to ver. 19, 20. C.

Ver. 27. This is a warning against dishonest suretiship, by them that have 'nothing to pay.' The deducible rule is the only one consistent with Christian integrity, viz. that no man should be surety for another beyond what he is able and, if need be, willing to pay for him. C.

CHAPTER XXIII. Ver. 1. When you are honoured with a seat at the table of a great man, remember that you are in danger if you take not heed to your behaviour, considering what and how you eat, what and how you speak, and to whom. 2. And avoid, as you would avoid death, every approach to intemperance and folly in language, as well as excess in eating and 6 Eat[h] thou not the bread of him that hath an 'evil eye, neither desire thou his dainty meats:

7 For as he thinketh in his heart, so is he: Eat[j] and drink, saith he to thee; but his heart is not with thee.

8 The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up, and lose thy sweet words.[5]

9 Speak[k] not in the ears of a fool; for he will despise the wisdom of thy words.

10 Remove[l] not the old land-mark;[6] and enter not into the fields of the fatherless:

11 For[m] their Redeemer is mighty; he shall plead their cause with thee.

12 Apply[o] thine heart unto instruction, and thine ears to the words of knowledge.

13 Withhold[p] not correction from the child; for if thou beatest him with the rod, he shall not die.[7]

14 Thou shalt beat him with the rod, and shalt deliver his soul from hell.

15 My[q] son, if thine heart be wise, my heart shall rejoice, even mine:[8]

16 Yea, my reins shall rejoice 'when thy lips speak right things.

17 Let[s] not thine heart envy sinners: 'but be thou in the fear of the LORD all the day long.

18 For[u] surely there is an end;[9] and thine expectation shall not be cut off.

19 Hear[v] thou, my son, and be wise, and guide thine heart in the way.

20 Be[x] not among wine-bibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh.[1]

21 For[y] the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty; and drowsiness shall clothe a man with rags.[2]

22 Hearken[z] unto thy father that begat thee, and despise not thy mother when she is old.

drinking; and so much the more if thou art given to such weakness. 3. Never show a fondness for delicate provision; for it often betrays men into excess, or into some indecent unwarrantable behaviour. 4. Never labour immoderately with heart or hand to obtain riches; and never depend on thy own prudent management, but on God himself, for the success of thy undertakings. 5. Never set thy mind or affections upon riches, nor pursue with eagerness what perhaps thou canst never attain; for if thou dost, they may suddenly and irrecoverably be taken from thee, and become witnesses against thee before God, with respect to thy guilt in pursuing or abusing them. 6. Never receive an obligation from a sordid, covetous, and churlish wretch; and never let the best cheer tempt thee to accept of his invitation to a feast: 7. For he is to be judged of by the disposition of his heart, not by his fair words. And while he flatters and urges thee to eat, he has no real kindness for thee, nor in the least wishes thee to make use of his provision. 8. When thou seest his sordid carriage, it will make thee repent thy tasting of his dainty meats, or paying any regard to his kind but deceitful compliments. 9. The wisest counsels and reproofs, addressed to fools and scorners, will be but contemned and trampled under their feet. 10, 11. Never encroach upon the property of the fatherless or others who have no help in man: for the Almighty God will take their part, redress their grievances, and revenge the injuries done to them. 12–16. If parents carefully instruct and correct, and children seriously regard and receive their instruction, and submit to their correction, it will greatly promote the happiness and comfort of both. 17, 18. Never envy the prosperity of sinners; but study to live in favour and in humble fellowship with God. Thus shall thy troubles quickly have an end, and the expected blessings of eternity be enjoyed by thee, while the prosperity of sinners shall be turned into everlasting misery. 19–21. Carefully study true wisdom, and let thine heart be exercised in faith and holiness. Avoid all intimacy with intemperate persons; for they and their slothful brethren will quickly reduce themselves to outward and even eternal misery. 22–25. Pay the utmost regard to the instructions, reproofs, and good example of parents: spare no pains or cost to know, embrace, and hold fast the truths of God; to find out and walk in the true way of salvation, and to grow in the knowledge of Christ, and never part with it upon any account. Thus shalt thou be a remarkable blessing and comfort to thy parents. 26–28. Receive my counsels with thy whole heart, that it may be filled with and fixed on a God in Christ; and carefully observe and follow my directions and example. Thus shalt thou be delivered from whorish women, by whose enticements multitudes are seduced into manifold wickedness and irrecoverable ruin. 29–35. Carefully avoid all drunkenness, and every occasion of or temptation to it, as it occasions bloody quarrels, inflames fleshly lusts, and animates to whoredom: it fills the mouth with obscene, rude, profane, or senseless discourse; it renders the head stupid and giddy; it hardens men in wickedness; and, in fine, issues in misery both here and hereafter.

Ver. 6. Niggardliness and hospitality are not unfrequently combined in the same person. This hospitality, however, originates not in kindness, but in ostentation. With such contradictory characters form no intimacy: what is essentially evil cannot come to good. C.

Ver. 23. Buy the truth by the expenditure of attentive hearing, earnest prayer, diligent study, unreserved obedience, devoted zeal, cheerful self-denial—in all 'looking unto Jesus,' and depending upon the promise and gift of his teaching Spirit, whom he has freely promised to all who 'ask.'—Sell it not to appetites, to indolence, to vanity, to pride, to covetousness—whereby Satan ever seeks to 'catch away' the seed of truth from the heart, Mat. 13. 19. C.

CHAPTER XXIV. Ver. 1. Never envy the prosperity of wicked men, nor desire any intimacy or connection with them. 2. For they contrive and labour to ruin others that themselves may become rich and great; and by lies, calumnies, and the like, they labour to undo them: but such conduct will at last bring destruction upon their own head. 3–6. True godliness, attended with prudence and diligence, is the proper method to procure estates, raise families, get wealth, strength, or victory. 7. Solid knowledge, and serious and sensible discourse, are above the reach of foolish inconsiderate persons; nor can they judge or advise to any purpose in public concerns. 8. The more art and contrivance there is in doing evil, the more malignity is there in it: and the doer ought to be held as ignominious and detestable. 9. The inclination to and contrivance of evil is sin; but he that makes a sport of sin, and contemns reproofs for it, ought to be abhorred by every person. 10. To give up all for lost, and be discouraged from duty, in the time of distress, is a great evidence of weakness in knowledge, wisdom, courage, and grace. 11, 12. If, pretending that thou didst not know their case or how to relieve them, thou neglectest to exert thyself for the deliverance of persons who, by hatred, envy, or false accusations, are in danger of losing their life, remember that God, who knows all the secrets of thy heart, who preserves thy soul in life, and observes all the motions of it, will severely punish thee, and give thee up to similar distress. 13, 14. As the most delightful satisfaction and nourishment are found in eating of honey, especially that pure part of it which drops from the comb, so shall solid and spiritual wisdom and knowledge be pleasant and profitable to thy soul, issuing in abundant present and eternal happiness, answerable to and even far exceeding thy most enlarged expectations. 15, 16. To attempt by craft or violence to ruin the righteous, even under their affliction, is as vain as it is malicious: for though they may frequently fall into sin, when they repent the Lord again raises them up: but wicked men, refusing to repent of sin, are plunged into irretrievable ruin. 17, 18. Never rejoice, no, not in heart, when any private enemy of thine falls into sin or trouble, lest the Lord be thereby provoked to deliver him, and plunge thee into the miserable condition from which he is recovered. 19, 20. Never envy the prosperity of wicked men, nor be enticed to follow their impieties on account of it; for whatever may be their appearance, they can have no real happiness here, nor anything but eternal misery hereafter: and often their blaze of outward prosperity is quickly extinguished, and either they or their seed reduced to wretchedness even in this life. 21, 22. Always reverence, worship, and obey God as thy own God in Christ; and be humbly obedient to magistrates, as his deputies on earth. Never have anything to do with those who appear fond of novelties, either in religion or in civil government; for unexpected and inconceivably dreadful calamities shall unavoidably and violently seize upon such, and upon their associates. 23. If thou wouldest be and appear wise, abhor it as a thing extremely sinful and ruinous, to regard persons in judgment on account of anything else but the merits of their cause. 24. Whoever, contrary to evidence, pronounces a wicked man innocent, or a bad cause to be good, exposes himself to the curses and detestation of men, and the fearful judgment of God. 25. But they who labour earnestly to check vice by the just punishment of evil-doers, shall have satisfaction in their own mind, and shall be remarkably blessed of God, and prayed for and commended by men. 26. Every person will highly honour and dearly love him who speaks the plain, naked, edifying, and seasonable truth, whether as a judge, a witness, or private person. 27. Never undertake or begin any weighty affair without king, and his throne shall be established in righteousness.

1 This is the commencement of the third division of the book. The proverbs in this division resemble to some extent those in the second; but there are noticeable differences. The verses in the second division consist generally of two antithetical members; in this division the two members are parallelic rather than antithetical. We notice a parallelism similar to that which characterizes Hebrew poetry. The proverbs, too, as a rule, are longer; sometimes they extend to two, three, and even more verses. There is also a topical connection in some of them, which is not observed in the proverbs of the second division. Another characteristic is that they are directed to the whole body of the people, whereas the former were chiefly designed for the young.—P.

1 During the harvest, that is, from April to July, snow is altogether unknown in Palestine; and with the exception of an occasional slight shower in April, rain never falls. All the operations of harvest, including threshing and winnowing, are performed in the open air; during the whole harvest period also, three-fourths of the people live and sleep in the open air; consequently rain or snow would be most inopportune and destructive.—P.

22 For thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, and the LORD shall reward thee.

deliberate thought and sufficient preparation. 28. Never rashly or groundlessly affirm or insinuate anything to the hurt of thy neighbour's character: and never entice any one to believe or say ill of him. 29. Never, either in heart, word, or deed, revenge the injuries done to thee. 30–34. And from the misery and want which others have brought upon themselves, by their negligence, sloth, or misspending of time, learn earnestly to avoid these things, as ruinous to thy outward estate, as well as to the spiritual and eternal happiness of thy soul.

Ver. 14. The knowledge of wisdom—the knowledge of Christ, 'the power of God, and the wisdom of God,' revealed to Old Testament saints in prophecies and types, not so clearly to the Jewish, but yet as certainly, as to the Christian church. C.

Ver. 16. A just man falleth seven times, &c. He falleth six times into trouble, sorrow, disappointments, and various calamities in worldly labours and affairs, arising sometimes from his own mistake or oversights, sometimes from others; a seventh time into religious afflictions (for such is the ordinary import of the seventh, as derived from the Sabbath), and these fallings may include mental anguish for himself, his friends, yea, his enemies, or the church—or they may include persecutions for the sake of truth and righteousness. Still he shall rise again, being helped of God, who will graciously perfect strength in his creature's weakness. C.

Ver. 26. Either he that giveth a right answer to a judge, whereby truth and justice are settled; or a right answer to an inquirer, whereby knowledge is extended; or a right answer to a caviller and false accuser, whereby iniquity is exposed, and innocence and right protected. C.

Ver. 30–32. I went by the field of the slothful... and received instruction. 'There is no darkness, nor shadow of death, where the workers of iniquity may hide themselves,' Job 34. 22. Do as they may, they are detected even by the eye of man. Thorns, nettles, and broken walls whisper the story of their owner's indolence, and point out the invisible spectre, poverty, as he advances in the guise of a hungry traveller, and discover the gleaming of those resistless arms with which he will soon destroy his thoughtless and self-devoted victim. C.

CHAPTER XXV. Ver. 2. It is the glory of God that his counsels are unfathomable, and his works, either of creation and providence, so mysterious, that the wisest on earth cannot comprehend their nature, reason, or ends: but it is the honour of kings diligently to search the Scriptures, thoroughly to examine intricate causes, and dive into plots and conspiracies, or fully to display the reasons of their actions. 3. But vulgar minds can no more judge of the secret reasons of statesmen, than they can perfectly search and measure the heavens and the earth. 4, 5. As silver, when purified from its dross, may be framed into whatever vessels the founder pleases; so kingdoms may be established in the most virtuous and happy forms, when wicked persons are removed from the counsels and company of kings. 6, 7. Never ambitiously affect or thrust thyself into courts, or any places or stations that belong not to thee; for it will be more honourable and satisfying to be invited to them, than to be disgracefully thrust from the honours which thou hast arrogated to thyself, and that in the presence of the prince unto whom thou hast approached too near. 8–10. Never enter into any contention till thou hast well considered the goodness and weight of thy cause, and how to manage it, lest in the issue thou be plunged into perplexity and covered with shame. And, if it be possible, make up matters privately, even where thy cause is good. And never let anger or hatred provoke thee to discover thy neighbour's secrets in order to disgrace him, lest such as hear of it not only reproach thee for thy perfidiousness, but even retort upon thee such shameful conduct, which will render thee infamous through life. 11, 12. A wise instruction, advice, reproof, or word of comfort, seasonably and properly given, is comely, valuable, and ornamental: and scarcely can anything be more ornamental in life than a ready and humble hearkening and submitting to wise and seasonable reproof. 13. Cold drink or air in harvest is not more grateful and refreshing to the reapers, than good servants or ambassadors are to their masters, by their speedy despatch of the important business committed to them, and faithful report of their success. 14. It is extremely empty and deceiving to boast of graces, virtues, or abilities which we have not, or to promise what we cannot or care not to perform. 15. By patient submission and expectation princes are most readily pacified and persuaded: and humble, soft, and affectionate language bows the most stiff and hardened tempers, and overcomes even stubborn resolutions to the contrary. 16. Created comforts and pleasures are very agreeable if used in due moderation; but otherwise they lose their relish and plunge us into guilt and trouble. 17. To maintain a friendly intercourse with our neighbours is dutiful and pleasant; but too many, too long, or unseasonable visits render us disagreeable and disliked. 18. Slander and a bearing false witness are most dangerous and murderous means of destroying our neighbour. 19. Confidence in an unfaithful person in the time of trouble will, to our great anguish and grief, entirely disappoint us of help or relief. 20. As taking away clothes in winter increases our sense of cold, and vinegar irritates nitre, so unseasonable mirth renders a sad heart still more sorrowful. 21, 22. In time of need always render good for evil; and kindly bestow necessary supplies on such as have injured thee: thus shalt thou soften their rage, slay their hatred, and gain their affections; and the Lord shall reward thee with blessings, while he fearfully punishes them if they continue obstinate. 23. As the north wind in many countries dispels clouds and prevents rain, so frowns and rebukes check reproachful slandering and lying. 24. It is better to live cooped up in a corner, exposed to all the injuries of the weather, than in a large family and stately palace with a contentious, brawling, and scolding wife. 25. Good and certain news from a far country, where our friends and fortunes are, is expected with impatience, heard with delight, and believed and thought on with refreshing pleasure; but especially the gospel, which brings from God the blessed tidings of pardon, peace, grace, and salvation. 26. When righteous men are decoyed into scandalous sins, or are degraded from their influence and authority, and oppressed and persecuted, it is as hurtful to a church or nation as if the public fountains were corrupted and poisoned. 27. To hunt after worldly applause and honours, however sweet they be to corrupt nature, is extremely disgraceful and dangerous. 28. And to be furious and passionate renders us useless and miserable.

Ver. 1. Men of Hezekiah. Who the 'men of Hezekiah' were is unknown; and in such cases conjecture is useless. Nor would the knowledge be of any value, for the object of the record is not to give authority to these proverbs, but to remind the wise men of one generation to preserve and copy out for circulation the wisdom of a foregoing generation.—Note, It is thus God has given grace to the Protestant churches to multiply and circulate so many millions of copies of the Holy Scriptures in almost all languages of the earth. C.

Ver. 9. In perfect accordance with that precept of our Saviour, 'If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone,' Mat. 18. 15.—Every confidential secret implies a trust; and he that reveals it, even to his most intimate friend, thereby teaches that friend to divulge it to another, and is thus most likely to be brought to shame as an idle babbler or unfaithful steward. C.

Ver. 11. Holden and others interpret the passage of oranges, citrons, and such golden or precious fruit, produced at feasts in baskets of silver network. But as it contains no mention of taste, the reference seems rather to be to figures of fruit of gold, interspersed amongst branches and leaves of silver, according to the gorgeous style of eastern palaces. C.

Ver. 13. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest. The snow of the lofty Hermon supplied, throughout the heat of summer and toil of harvest, snow for cooling either wine or water—the most reviving of all cordials under a burning sun. C.

Ver. 17. No wise man can be much in his neighbour's house; for any man will find useful employment in his own. And he that imposes himself upon others, because he is weary of himself or of his duty, will soon become a weariness and a nuisance to others. C.

Ver. 20. As vinegar upon nitre. Vinegar poured on the nitre of the ancients (carbonate of soda) causes an instant ebullition in the form of tears. And so does the ill-timed mirth of the fool wring new sorrows from the heavy heart. C.

Ver. 22. Thou shalt heap coals of fire upon his head, &c. And so extract love from his angry heart, and purify him from his enmity, as 'coals of fire' extract metals from the hard rock, and clear away the dross with which they are commingled. 'The Lord shall reward thee' with thine enemy's conversion, or the peace of thine own conscience. C.

Ver. 26. A righteous man, tempted by fear or hope, to flatter and become subservient to the wicked, is sure to trouble his own peace of mind, if not finally to corrupt his principles. Peter trembling before a servant maid, and accommodating his speech to a rude and blasphemous soldiery, is a striking exemplification of this proverb. C.

CHAPTER XXVI. Ver. 1. Dignity and authority are very ill placed in the hands of foolish and wicked men, who know not how to use them, but will do mischief to themselves and others by them. 2. Causeless curses and imprecations can hurt the innocent no more than the birds that fly over their heads. 3. Obstinate, stupid, and refractory sinners, like beasts, must, by sharp punishments, be restrained from evil, and excited to good. 4. Answer not an ignorant and impertinent fool in his own brawling and reproachful manner, so as to imitate his impertinence. 5. Answer a proud conceited fool with such strength and evidence of reason as may render him sensible of his folly, and check his pride. 6. He who employs fools or rakes in any important business, deprives himself of the advantage he might have expected, and brings much inconvenience and mischief upon himself. 7. As dancing or walking by a lame man would but manifest his lameness, so the pretences of fools to wisdom do but render them the more ridiculous. 8. Honour bestowed upon fools is very unstable and useless, if not mischievous. 9. Grave, holy, and wise sayings upbraid fools for their impertinence and wickedness, however insensible they may be of the sharpest rebukes. 10. God, and even wise princes, punish sins of ignorance and wilful wickedness in a wise, just, and suitable manner. 11. Foolish sinners quickly, and often shamelessly, return to the very sins for which they have been sharply punished, and of which they have before repented, as grievous and hurtful. 12. There is more hope of the amendment of a sottish man, than of one who is so wise and virtuous in his own conceit that he thinks himself above instruction. 13. They who have no mind to labour, never want pretences for their idleness; and their sluggish fancy represents to them the most improbable and insuperable difficulties. 14. It is almost a toil for such to turn themselves on their bed; and though they seem busy, they do nothing to the purpose. Though they move in the formal round of external duties, they are never a whit nearer to heaven. 15. Pretending cold, or inability, they can scarcely apply to any work; and it is almost a burden for them to take their meat. 16. But though they take no pains to acquire knowledge, they look upon themselves as perfect miracles in wisdom, and treat with absolute contempt every argument that can be used to convince them of their mistakes and danger. 17. It is extremely dangerous to engage in other men's quarrels and disputes, which do not belong to us. 18, 19. To wrong our neighbours, by either word or deed, and then pretend that it was in jest, discovers us to be stupidly insolent and diabolically mad. 20. A proper discouragement of tale-bearers, whisperers, and slanderers, is an effectual mean to prevent contentions, or even to extinguish such as are begun. 21. It is also necessary to avoid contentious persons, who, by their provoking language, kindle up or inflame quarrels, even as one inflamed coal or piece of wood kindles another. 22. The wounds given to men's characters, business, and spirits, by calumnies slyly and secretly spread, are extremely painful and hurtful, and sometimes will scarcely admit of a cure. 23. Malicious and angry language corresponds very well with an envious and wicked heart; and notwithstanding their fine show, scarcely anything is more detestable than affectionate words when used to cover hatred and enmity of heart; nor will the dissimulation pass long undetected. 24–26. Nothing is more common in the world than dissembled professions of regard and affection; and yet nothing more base, and in the end more hurtful and ignominious, to the user. 27. They who labour to destroy their neighbours, whether by fraud or violence, involve themselves in the very mischiefs which they had intended for others. 28. Liars and slanderers chiefly hate those whom they have slandered, fearing that they may avenge themselves; and also those who confute their slanders. And flat-

Ver. 19. If there be one practical advice more important than another, it is this: 'Never speak a word but in truth—be always in earnest:' a loose jest may 'set the table in a roar;' no harm may be meant; but no good is intended: it is therefore sin. And as a firebrand, thrown at random, may destroy a splendid palace, so may a thoughtless jest ruin a fair reputation.—Note, Children, look to a God of truth—speak words of truth—never jest at the expense of truth—be always in earnest. C.

Ver. 23. Silver dross is ordinarily lead, with which the cheapest kinds of earthenware are covered by the potter while immersed in a burning furnace. 'Burning lips' are not 'lips breathing warmth of affection,' but 'words that burn' up reputations (see ver. 24), and which are often covered over, and even ornamented as with 'silver dross.' Yet as a 'potsherd' shall they be dashed to pieces, when men 'by their words shall be justified, and by their words shall be condemned.' C.

CHAPTER XXVII. Ver. 1. Never boast what thou wilt be, or do, in any future period; for thou knowest not what changes Providence may make in a very short time. 2. Never commend thy own excellencies or works; but leave that to others who cannot be suspected of partiality. 3, 4. The anger, cruelty, and rage of foolish men are very intolerable, crushing, and hard to be appeased; but an envious desire of revenge is still more dangerous, as it lies hid, increases daily, and is more and more exasperated, till it find opportunity to vent itself in the intended mischief. 5. To tell men plainly of their faults, and rebuke them freely when need requires, is a more valuable piece of friendship than the strongest inward affection. 6. Just and seasonable reproofs, however severe, ought to be cheerfully received when they proceed from true love and faithful regard: but the most tender and abundant expressions of kindness from an enemy ought to be suspected as false and treacherous. 7. Rich men are apt to be unsatisfied with, or even to nauseate, the most delicious enjoyments: but poverty disposes men to a ready and thankful reception of the smallest blessings, though mixed with care and labour. 8. When men, by levity or discontent, change their country, trade, or office in which Providence had placed them, they ordinarily expose themselves to manifold dangers and inconveniences, but rarely mend their condition. 9. The kind conversation and prudent counsels of affectionate friends are extremely refreshing and comfortable. 10. Nay, such friends are more to be depended on in a time of distress than our nearest relations. 11. My son, improve these instructions to make thee truly wise and good; which will at once comfort my heart, and enable me to refute such as charge me with want of due care about my children. 12. Prudent men foresee the approach of calamities, and take proper methods to avoid them; but inconsiderate persons, deceived by others, securely rush forward till they are ruined. 13. Never trust, without a sufficient pledge, a man that is so foolish and rash as to be surety for persons whom he knows not, and even for harlots. 14. Extravagant and flattering commendations of a friend or benefactor are rather a disparagement than an honour, as it is a shame to have connection with such silly sycophants. 15. A contentious and brawling woman is a continued plague and a destructive ruin to her husband, family, and estate: 16. For it is quite impossible to conceal her infamous bawling humour, or to make her hold her tongue. 17. By mutual conversation friends quicken the wit, enliven the affection, strengthen the judgment, and animate the activity of one another. 18. Such servants as faithfully defend their master's person and reputation, and labour to preserve and promote his wealth, ought to be rewarded by him, and shall be honoured of God and men. 19. There is a surprising likeness in the tempers and dispositions of men, both among saints and sinners; and most are inclined to carry themselves towards others as they do towards them. And they who are remarkably sagacious can penetrate far into the inclinations and designs of others. 20. It is impossible to satisfy the corrupt desires of men: the more they are indulged the more they crave: and nothing but the fulness of God can satisfy the desires of an immortal soul. 21. Nothing more effectually tries a man than high commendations. If he be light, vain, frothy, and easily puffed up by them, it discovers his emptiness: but if under them he be humble, modest, and sensible of his own defects, it manifests him truly valuable. 22. Some are so hardened and stupified in their sinful courses, that no reproofs or corrections can make them a whit better. 23–27. Masters should look after the management of their worldly affairs themselves, and not leave all to servants; for without due care and diligence, the richest estates will soon come to nought: whereas by a proper care of the hay, grass, herbs, and flocks which Providence bestows, they may enjoy a most comfortable livelihood for themselves and families.

Ver. 16. Eastern women may be literally called hidden, whether in the tent in the desert, or the harem in the city. But the unsanctified contentious woman, who has not received of the Lord that ornament of a 'meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price,' 1 Pe. 3. 4, can no more have her folly hid than the wind can be restrained from blowing, or ointment on the hand from betraying its presence by its odour. C.

Ver. 22. The pestle and mortar were used for separating grain from the husk long subsequent to the introduction of mills; and in some European countries are still used for the formation of a substitute for what, in Britain, is called 'pearl-barley.' The image admirably illustrates the inseparability of folly from a fool. C.

CHAPTER XXVIII. Ver. 1. Guilt makes men cowards but conscious integrity makes men courageous, and proceed with undaunted resolution in the most hazardous undertakings. 2. To punish the wickedness of nations, God permits them to fall into factions or murder their sovereigns; but a prince of remarkable piety

CHAPTER XXVIII.

General observations of impiety and religious integrity.

THE wicked[a] flee when no man pursueth: but [b]the righteous are bold as a lion.

2 For[c] the transgression of a land many are the princes thereof: [d]but by[1] a man of understanding and knowledge the state thereof shall be prolonged.[2]

3 A[e] poor man that oppresseth the poor[3] is like a sweeping rain, which leaveth[4] no food.[5]

4 They[g] that forsake the law praise the wicked: but such as keep the law contend with them.

5 Evil[h] men understand not judgment: but they that seek the LORD understand all things.

6 Better[i] is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways, though he be rich.

7 Whoso[j] keepeth the law is a wise son: [k]but he that is a companion of riotous men[6] shameth his father.

8 He[l] that by usury and unjust gain[7] increaseth his substance, he shall gather it for him that will pity the poor.

9 He[n] that turneth away his ear from hearing the law, [o]even his prayer shall be abomination.

10 Whoso[p] causeth the righteous to go astray in an evil way, he shall fall himself into his own pit: but [q]the upright shall have good things in possession.

11 The[r] rich man is wise in his own conceit:[8] but [s]the poor that hath understanding searcheth him out.

12 When[t] righteous men do rejoice, there is great glory: but when the wicked rise, a man is hidden.[9]

13 He[u] that covereth his sins shall not prosper: but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy.

14 Happy[v] is the man that feareth [1]alway: [z]but he that hardeneth his heart shall fall into mischief.

15 As[y] a roaring lion, and a ranging bear; so is a wicked ruler over the poor people.

16 The[z] prince that wanteth understanding is also a great oppressor: [a]but he that hateth covetousness shall prolong his days.

17 A[b] man that doeth violence to the blood of any person shall flee to the pit; let no man stay him.

18 Whoso[c] walketh uprightly[2] shall be saved: but he that is perverse in his ways shall fall at once.

19 He[d] that tilleth his land shall have plenty of bread: but he that followeth after vain persons shall have poverty enough.

20 A[e] faithful man shall abound with blessings: [g]but he that maketh haste to be rich shall not be [3]innocent.[4]

21 To[h] have respect of persons is not [5]good: for, for a piece of bread that man will transgress.

22 He that hasteth to be rich hath an evil eye,[6] and[i] considereth not that poverty shall come upon him.

23 He[j] that rebuketh a man, afterwards shall find more favour than he that flattereth with the tongue.

24 Whoso [k]robbeth his father or his mother, and saith, It is no transgression; the same is the companion of a destroyer.[7]

25 He[l] that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife: [n]but he that putteth his trust in the LORD shall be made fat.

26 He[o] that trusteth in his own heart is a fool: [p]but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be[8] delivered.

[5] The greater part of Palestine was cultivated in terraces. With immense care and skill the terraces were constructed along glen, bank, and mountain side, from base to summit. Gentle rain watered the thirsty soil, and made it productive. But a sweeping torrent, such as at long intervals deluges the country, washes the soil off the terraces, breaks down the rude sustaining walls and banks, and leaves vast tracts bare and desolate.—P.

and prudence is extremely useful for settling or preserving a state. 3. A needy man placed in power, and squeezing from the poor that little which they have, is a most ruinous scourge to a nation. 4. Apostates from the ways of God are the most forward in encouraging men in wickedness, and commending them for it: but they who resolutely observe God's law, do what they can to reform or punish them. 5. Unregenerate men have no solid or experimental knowledge of what is right or wrong: but they who study God's Word, and depend on his instructions, understand whatever is necessary to salvation. 6. A poor man, who acts honestly and uprightly in all he does, is far happier, and more useful and commendable, than a rich pretender to virtue, who obstinately and craftily practises vice. 7. He is an honour to his parents, as well as to himself, who studies the law of God, and observes the rules of piety and sobriety there prescribed: but he that associates himself with rakes, drunkards, and gluttons, and spends his time and money in sensual pleasures, is a shame and vexation to them. 8. God often translates the wealth, gotten by covetousness and oppression, from the gatherers into the hands of such as are merciful and benevolent. 9. The very prayers and other religious services of them who obstinately live in their sins are, in God's view, an abominable and hypocritical prostitution of his ordinances, since it appears as if they thus intended to make him a partner in their wickedness. 10. They who by their persuasion, example, or cunning contrivances seduce upright men into sinful and dangerous practices, shall themselves irrecoverably fall into that very mischief which they intended for others: but they who live in simplicity and godly sincerity shall enjoy the blessings of grace here and of glory hereafter. 11. Rich men, being courted and complimented by every one, are apt to imagine themselves extremely wise: but sensible and religious persons, however poor, quickly discern their emptiness and ignorance. 12. It is an honour and happiness for a nation when pious and prudent men are advanced to places of power and trust: but when the wicked are exalted, the persons, lives, and estates, especially of good men, are in danger, and they are obliged to conceal them. 13. He that conceals, extenuates, or defends his sins, exposes himself to severe punishments: but he who through faith in Christ confesses and forsakes them, shall be graciously blessed by God and honoured by men. 14. Happy is he who lives under the constant awe of God's perfections, and under a jealousy of his own evil heart and a fear to do evil: but he that obstinately and presumptuously goes on in his sinful courses shall irrecoverably and eternally perish. 15. How cruel and terrible a plague is a tyrannical ruler! His subjects, unable to resist, are harassed by oppression, and terrified with fears of still greater evils.—17. Murderers shall never be able to escape the judgment of God; but shall hurry themselves into sudden and irretrievable destruction, without any one to help or pity them. 18. Real godliness, strict honesty and integrity, are the sure road to safety, honour, and happiness: but fraudulent sinners, obstinate in their wickedness, shall quickly involve themselves in the depths of misery. 19, 20. They who believe in Christ, and act with diligence, fidelity, and candour in their dealings, shall have abundant blessings from God and honours from men: but they who hasten to be rich, render themselves execrable by their base and fraudulent methods. 21. When judges have accustomed themselves to respect persons in judgment, the most insignificant bribe will make them disregard both law and equity, and favour an unrighteous cause. 22. He that hastens to be rich envies everybody who has more than himself, covets whatever he sees, and grudges to part with the most necessary expense or alms; and never seriously thinks how quickly God may take him from his wealth, or it become a curse to him, so that through his money he corrupts himself. 23. They who in an honest and friendly manner reprove a man for his faults, will afterwards have much more of his favour and regard than they who flatter him in his sins. 24. They who snatch all that they can from their parents are as bad as common robbers, and are in a fair way to associate themselves with such. 25. A man of a proud, insolent, and ambitious spirit involves himself in perpetual quarrels, and has no satisfaction in what he enjoys; nay, many times wastes his estate in contentions: but he who, trusting in the Lord to redress his grievances, patiently bears injuries, lives comfortably and happy. 26. Nothing is more foolish than to rely wholly on our own wisdom and ability, or to trust in our own heart, which is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: but he who walks according to the counsels of wise men, and the directions of God, shall escape, or be delivered out of, manifold dangers and troubles. 27. He who kindly and cheerfully relieves such as are in want shall 27 He[q] that giveth unto the poor shall not lack: but he that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse.

28 When[r] the wicked rise, men hide themselves: but when they perish, the righteous increase.

thereby increase his own estate: but he that avoids taking notice of their miseries draws upon himself the curse of God and of men. 28. When wicked men are increased in number, and advanced in authority, good men are obliged to hide themselves from their tyranny and persecution: but when God casts down the wicked, the righteous take courage, and openly show themselves; and their numbers are increased under pious and prudent governors.

Ver. 5. They that seek the Lord understand all things. They know more about all things, than worldly men know about any one thing: for they 'know that all things work together for good to them that love God.' C.

Ver. 7. Shameth his father. Shames him for neglecting his education—for not restraining him in time—or, notwithstanding all his care, breaks his heart by his incorrigible follies. C.

Ver. 11. It is the special duty of the rich to give their children a good education, both in secular and religious knowledge; for if the well-educated poor once discover any inferiority in the rich, contempt for their ignorance, and the disorganization of society, is sure to follow.—Note, A true religious education can alone teach the rich kindness and the poor gratitude. C.

Ver. 17. The murderer shall flee in terror of conscience till the grave receives him: let no man stay him in this flight by hiding him from deserved justice, Ge. 9. 6. C.

Ver. 22. An evil eye never means, as the ignorant and superstitious imagine, an eye that can inflict evil according to the malignity of its owner; but an eye that cannot see aright, because of some obstruction in its organization. In this verse, temporal riches form the obstruction that will not permit the hastener to see things that are 'not seen and eternal,' 2 Co. 4. 18. C.

CHAPTER XXIX. Ver. 2, 4. Where justice is impartially executed, and liberty and property secured, the nation grows great and happy; but bribery and oppressive taxes ruin a state. 5. Flatterers artfully draw men into wickedness and ruin. 6. In the wicked course of sinners, one sin draws on another and its attendant plagues; but the godly, by walking in Christ, obtain solid and lasting joy and comfort.—8. Obstinate sinners and scornful men, by laughing at all things serious, sacred, or civil, throw nations and cities into the most ruinous disorder; but pious and prudent rulers, by their prayers and piety, avert the deserved judgment of God, and by their wise conduct divert the fury of men. 9. It is to no purpose to spend reasonings or reproofs upon incorrigible fools; for in whatever manner they appear to take them, they will still persist in their folly and wickedness. 10. Blood-thirsty men direct their murderous malice especially against godly magistrates or other valuable persons; but such as are truly virtuous labour to defend and promote the welfare of such. 11. Fools inconsiderately speak out whatever comes into their head; but wise men think well before they speak, and only utter what they know and as the opportunity requires. 12. If a ruler hearken to lies, flatteries, or false accusations, his whole court will quickly become so wicked, that it will be hard to find an honest man in office. 13. Poor men who want estates, and rich men who get or increase their estates by fraud, are connected together in this world, and the Lord, without distinction, allows to both his light of nature, or revelation, and blessings of providence, as is good in his sight. 14. Kings who faithfully administer justice to their subjects, and set themselves to protect and help the poor, take the most proper course to gain their subjects' affection, and to continue their kingdom to many generations. 15. Careful instructions and reproofs, and prudent corrections, are of great use to render children wise, prudent, and pious: but children left to follow their own inclinations prove a disgrace and plague to parents, particularly to their indulgent mothers. 16. When wicked men are increased in number and advanced in dignity, presumptuous wickedness abounds more and more: but the righteous ought not to be discouraged, as they shall quickly see their downfall. 17. Children carefully brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, bid fair to be a help and comfort to their parents. 18. Where men want the oracles of God and ordinances of the gospel, they cannot but live wickedly on earth and be miserable in eternity: but great is the present and future happiness of such as, renewed by his grace, strictly observe his laws. 19. No persuasion, reproofs, or threatenings will avail with some refractory and slavish-minded servants; nothing but blows will make them regard what is said or attend to their duty. 20. It is more easy to instruct and reform the most weak and ignorant, than to rectify what is amiss in a rash, heady, and self-conceited manager of his affairs. 21. If servants, who continue long in a family, be too much indulged or favoured, they are apt to behave with as much boldness and freedom as if they were children; or even to domineer over them, and labour to disinherit them. 22. Passionate persons are apt to quarrel and contend about trifles, and to fall into a multitude of sins, in word or deed, both against God and men. 23. Proud, saucy, and ambitious behaviour renders men contemned, hated, and miserable; but meekness and humility procure useful and lasting honours. 24. Partnership with thieves or fraudulent persons, endangers both soul and body, and is apt to involve men in perjury. 25. An immoderate fear of men ensnares us into much guilt and mischief: but he that puts his whole confidence in God shall be preserved from them. 26. Multitudes court the favour of princes and other great men: but it is God alone who determines the lots of men here and hereafter. 27. There is a stated antipathy between the righteous and wicked; their natures, tempers, counsels, and ends being the very reverse of each other.

Ver. 1. Hardeneth himself by seeking excuses or palliations for his sin; or even false interpretations and doctrines to defend his evil courses. He 'shall fall without remedy,' as the carcasses of the unbelievers fell in the wilderness, to whom God sware in his wrath, they should not enter into his rest, He. 3. 11. C.

Ver. 4. He that receiveth gifts. According to the margin, 'a man of oblations.' The true meaning seems to be: a king who supports justice and equity in the fear of God, establishes his kingdom; but he who substitutes for these 'weightier matters of the law,' mere 'legal oblations,' ceremonial observances, overthrows it. This was literally exemplified and fulfilled by the rulers of the Jews in the days of our Lord. See Mat. 23. 23, 38. C.

Ver. 12. The ruler that 'hearkens to lies,' is either he that will bear nothing but flattery, or he that will credulously receive false accusations, and will indolently neglect to judge for himself. All his servants will soon be wicked: for godly men will fly from him; and wicked men will gather around him, as vultures to the carcass of the dead. C.

Ver. 13. The deceitful man, who overreached him, oppressed him, and made him poor.—The Lord lighteneth both their eyes. The enriched to see, if he would, better riches than he has gained; the poor, to seek better than he has lost. C.

Ver. 19. Even 'a servant' will not be corrected by (mere hasty) words, see ver. 20; example, authority, and religious principle must all be brought to bear upon him. C.

Ver. 24. That the Jewish judges adjured the accused is evident from the case of our Lord, Mat. 26. 62–64. The verse accordingly means, that the 'partner' (the accomplice) of the thief hears such an adjuration: yet, bound by a false and diabolical principle, misnamed honour, 'bewrayeth not the matter,' and is thereby guilty of perjury, to the ruin of his soul. C.

CHAPTER XXX. Ver. 2. Though of men I am the least learned, and human wisdom possess not; and though in science I have had no instruction, yet of holy things have I knowledge—(Hodgson). C.

Ver. 19. The eagle soaring high in air, its eye and appetite on earth, till, with the rapidity of lightning, it descends upon its unsuspecting prey.—The serpent scaling the lofty rock, where armies could not follow, and noiselessly and fatally smiting its victim.—The ship, impelled by invisible winds, adopting innumerable 13 There is a generation, O how [s]lofty are their eyes! and their eyelids are lifted up.

14 There is a generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw-teeth as knives, to [t]devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.[3]

15 ¶ The horse-leech hath two [4]daughters, crying, Give, give. There are three things that are never satisfied, yea, four things say not, It is enough:[5]

16 The[u] grave; and the barren womb; the earth that is not filled with water; and the fire that saith not, It is enough.

17 ¶ The[v] eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley[6] shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it.

18 ¶ There be three things which are too wonderful for me, yea, four which I know not:

19 The[x] way of an eagle in the air; [y]the way of a serpent upon a rock; the way of a ship in the midst[7] of the sea; and [z]the way of a man with a maid.

20 Such[a] is the way of an adulterous woman; she eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness.

21 For three things the earth is disquieted, and for four which it cannot bear:

22 For[b] a servant when he reigneth; and a fool when he is filled with meat;

23 For[c] an odious woman when she is married; and an handmaid [d]that is heir to her mistress.

24 ¶ There be four things which are [e]little upon the earth, but they are exceeding wise:[8]

25 The[g] ants are a people not strong, yet they prepare their meat in the summer;

26 The[h] conies are but a feeble folk, yet make they their houses in the rocks;

27 The[i] locusts have no king, yet go they forth all of them by bands;[9]

28 The[j] spider taketh hold with her hands, and is in kings' palaces.

29 ¶ There be three things which go well, yea, four are comely in going:

30 A lion,[1] which is strongest among beasts, and turneth not away for any;

31 A greyhound;[2] and an he-goat also; and a king, [k]against whom there is no rising up.

32 If[l] thou hast done foolishly in lifting up thyself, or if thou hast thought evil, [m]lay thine hand upon thy mouth.

* Of Agur, Jakeh, Ithiel, and Ucal, nothing is historically known, and conjecture is useless. Nor is it generally so important to know who a man was, as to know his sentiments—his principles of action. Agur signifies stranger or gathered; Jakeh, ready obedience; Ithiel, God with me; Ucal, power. C.—The fourth great division of the book begins with this chapter. It is different from all the others. Its author is different, and its style and subject are different. In the words of Agur we have, as Ewald says, a succession of beautiful little pictures illustrating great moral truths. The style is not so dignified, nor is the language so pure and archaic in character, as the early portions of the book. —P.

courses, braving all dangers—then deceitfully 'reposing on her shadow' in port, as if she had never felt the wind or been tossed upon a wave.—The man secretly desiring, and, undeterred by coldness or repulse, ardently wooing and winning the maid of his choice; and in the exercise of chastened and holy affections, not only conscious of no guilt, but fully assured of a blessing: these four are the emblems of the adulteress. As the eagle she on her prey descends; as the serpent she glides and poisons her victim; as the ship in the storm she is tossed by passions, yet seems ever in the calm of smiles and blandishments; and with all the ardour of youthful devotedness seeking the object of its hallowed affections will she pursue her guilty courses, and, by aid of a hardened conscience (her substitute for innocence), will she 'feast, and wipe her mouth, and say, I have done no wickedness.'—And woe to the lamb when the eagle soars! and woe to the callow bird when the serpent glides! and woe to the sailor-boy who trusts the calm and never foresees the storm! and woe to the man who yields his peace and salvation to the persevering lures, the deceitful smiles, and the hardened conscience of an adulteress! REFLECTIONS.—Let me thus always think meanly of myself, and highly of my God and Saviour, and of his works and Word: and be a good savour of Christ to all around me. Earnestly should I covet further degrees of holiness, but be regardless as to the comforts and enjoyments of this life, and content with such things as I have. Let me never be a busybody in other men's matters, but heedfully watch against the temptations incident to my own condition. Let me never be an idle spectator of what is around me: but whatever evil I observe, let me avoid, hate, and mourn over it; and whatever good I observe, even in animals, let me, in a Christian manner, imitate the same. If I have proudly involved myself in sin, humbly should I repent of it, and always avoid contention before it be meddled with. Nothing is to be got by pride, passion, or ill language but bloodshed and damage.

1 Lemuel's lesson of chastity and temperance. 6 The afflicted are to be comforted and defended. 10 The praise and properties of a good wife.

THE words of king Lemuel, the prophecy[1] that his [a]mother taught him.[2]

2 What,[b] my son? and what, the son of my womb? and what, the son of my vows?

3 Give[c] not thy strength unto women, nor thy ways to that which destroyeth kings.

4 It[d] is not for kings, O Lemuel,[3] it is not for kings to drink wine, nor for princes strong drink;

5 Lest[e] they drink, and forget the law, and pervert[4] the judgment of any of the afflicted.[5]

6 ¶ Give[g] strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts.[6]

7 Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more.[7]

8 Open[h] thy mouth for the dumb in the cause of all such as are appointed to destruction.[8]

9 Open thy mouth, [i]judge righteously, and plead the cause of the poor and needy.

10 ¶ Who[j] can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.[9]

11 The[k] heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil.[1]

12 She[l] will do him good, and not evil, all the days of her life.

13 She[m] seeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands.

14 She[o] is like the merchants' ships, she bringeth her food from afar.

15 She[p] riseth also while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens.[2]

16 She[q] considereth a field, and buyeth [3]it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard.

17 She[r] girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms.

18 She perceiveth[4] that her merchandise is good: [s]her candle goeth not out by night.

19 She[t] layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff.

20 She[u] stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth[5] forth her hands to the needy.

21 She is not afraid of the snow for her household; for all her household are clothed with scarlet.[6]

22 She[v] maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple.

23 Her husband is known [x]in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land.

24 She[y] maketh fine linen, and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchant.

25 Strength[z] and honour are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come.

26 She[a] openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

27 She[b] looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.[7]

28 Her[c] children arise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.

29 Many daughters have done [8]virtuously, but thou excellest them all.

30 Favour[d] is deceitful, and beauty is vain: but [e]a woman that feareth the LORD, she shall be praised.

31 Give[g] her of the fruit of her hands; and let her own works praise her in the gates.

CHAPTER XXXI. Ver. 1. Of Lemuel nothing more is known than what is here recorded: and where there is nothing certain, conjecture is of no service. The word signifies 'God with them;' and if rulers did but know and always feel by whom, and for whom, and to whom they reign, it would ever be the best description of that high office to which 'the powers that be are ordained of God.' C.

Ver. 22. Silk. Rather, linen. It is doubtful if silk was known in Western Asia till long after the time of Christ. C.

Ver. 26. This passage is a beautiful description of a good wife, given of the Lord; but its real excellency lies in being an emblem of the church, opening 'her mouth with wisdom,' and knowing nothing by her ministers but 'Jesus Christ and him crucified.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—What blessings might mothers be to families, churches, and nations, would they but carefully educate their children! And it is unnatural and irreligious when they do otherwise. When princes are given to whoredom and drunkenness, and regardless of the poor or of the exact administration of justice, they are but a plague to the nation which they govern. With great care and circumspection ought all, especially such as bear rule in church or state, to make choice of their yokefellows in marriage. And it is a great blessing to themselves, and all their connections, if Providence direct them aright. But it is absurd and ruinous when wealth, beauty, or parentage are preferred to real virtue and religion, in the choice of wives or husbands. What a scandal to human nature is it when wives become the plague, the reproach of families! or when such as are virtuous and prudent are abused by husbands, unfaithful, drunken, imperious, cruel, outrageous, or churlish!—But infinite is the mercy that God, by his grace, has formed all who accept Christ into a living church, which, as the spouse of his Son, are made to answer this amiable and glorious description.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF PROVERBS.

Solomon, we are told (1 Ki. 4. 32), composed no less than three thousand proverbs. As we count them, in modern verses, this collection does not contain so many. The conclusion therefore is, that many have been allowed to pass into oblivion, and that we possess but a part. If it be so, this is in no way to be wondered at in the case of Solomon, since we are told (John 20. 30) that, even in the case of 'a greater than Solomon,' 'many other miracles' are stated to have been wrought, which were not specifically recorded by the evangelist. Next to the book of Psalms, the Proverbs of Solomon are most frequently quoted in the New Testament; and that, be it well observed, not merely as a treasury of moral precepts, but as a direct revelation of JESUS as the wisdom of God and the power of God.

If considered merely as a collection of moral precepts for the regulation of fathers, mothers, children, and servants in families—or of kings, magistrates, and subjects in states—it contains more true practical wisdom than all the philosophers of Greece Rome, and more modern times, have ever been able to produce. Nor can there be any question that the ancient and most distinguished philosophers of Greece borrowed the principles of their moral doctrines from these proverbs; and have, in two respects, surpassed the modern deistical moralists; first, in the superiority of their moral code; and, secondly, in the honesty wherewith they acknowledged the source from which they were borrowed.

The book of Proverbs seems naturally divisible into five parts:—1. The first nine chapters containing various instructions and excitements to the study of the true wisdom—the knowledge of JESUS CHRIST, 'the wisdom of God, and the power of God.' 2. From x.-xxii. 16, which contains what is properly called the Proverbs. 3. From xxii. 17—xxv. inclusive, containing paternal instructions, speaking as unto children. 4. Extends from xxv.-xxix. inclusive, consisting of detached moral precepts, and is distinguished by having been 'copied out' by 'the men of Hezekiah.' 5. Includes xxx. xxxi.; the former containing the prayer and instructions of Agur to Ithiel and Ucal: the other addressed to Lemuel by his mother.

The whole, if considered as a mere literary and philosophical monument of the Hebrews, in the days of their prosperity, would place them as far above 'Greek and Roman glory,' as the sun, in his brightness, is above a flickering and 'sickly taper;' while, independent of all external evidences, the height, the depth, and immaculate purity of their morals, present an internal illustration of their divine origin, which no candid mind can possibly resist.—C.

THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

To warn others, Solomon here (1) Represents the vanity and vexation which adhere to all created enjoyments; particularly to those in which men ordinarily look for happiness; as human learning and policy, sensual delights, honour, power, and riches, or an empty profession of religion, ch. i.–vi. (2) Prescribes remedies against that vanity and vexation which attend those things; viz. sitting loose to them; enjoying them moderately, but never expecting much from them; acquiescing in the will of God concerning us in every event; remembering God in the days of our youth; and continuing all our life in his fear and service, with an eye to the future judgment, ch. vii.–xii. But in both parts the demonstrations of the vanity of things, and the prescriptions of remedies, are somewhat mixed.

[This book has been frequently represented as 'Solomon's penitential discourse, composed a little before his death; in which he recants and laments' his follies and departures from God. From whom, or at what time, this opinion originated in the Christian church, we are unable to say: nor is it of any importance to ascertain its origin. To say the least of it, it is altogether unsupported by any scriptural authority! It is also unsupported by any traditional Jewish authority. For the Talmudical writers ascribe the book, not to Solomon, but to Hezekiah; Kimchi, to the prophet Isaiah; while Grotius considers it to have been composed by order of Zerubbabel. Jahn refers it to a period posterior to the Babylonish captivity, and Zirkel to the times of Antiochus Epiphanes; and Jerome informs us, that, on account of some imaginary contradictions, the Jews, after the captivity, were averse to receiving it into the canon of Scripture, till more mature consideration convinced them of their error. That Solomon was the author, is apparent from internal evidence; especially from ch. 1. 12, 16; 2. 4, 6; 12. 9, 10. Of the Christian reader we ask specially that, when entering upon the study of it, he would lay aside all preconceived and unauthorized opinions about the date and object of the book, and come to examine it in a prayerful and teachable spirit. And this matter is more peculiarly necessary than may at first sight appear: for as he that views a landscape through a coloured glass, sees every object tinged with some colour that belongs not to the object, but to the glass; so he that commences the study of this book, under the impression that it is a record of Solomon's personal experience, retractation, and penitence—nay more, a kind of death-bed renunciation of the follies by which his wisdom had been stained—comes with a principle of interpretation that he brings to no other book; that is, an unauthorized determination about what the writer must intend, and not a simple inquiry into the meaning of what he actually says.

In humbly entering upon the interpretation of this book, we therefore cast away every opinion, however current and however supported, about the date and object of this book; and, by the grace of God, seek to ascertain the mind of the Spirit as revealed in its contents. C.]

CHAPTER I.

1 The Preacher showeth that all human courses are vain: 4 because the creatures are restless in their courses, 9 they bring forth nothing new, and all old things are forgotten, 12 and because he hath found it to be so in the studies of wisdom.

A.M. cir. 3029. B.C. cir. 975.

THE words of [a]the Preacher,[1] the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

2 Vanity[b] of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity.[2]

3 What[c] profit hath a man of all his labour which he taketh under the sun?

4 ¶ One[d] generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: [e]but the earth abideth for ever.

5 The[g] sun also ariseth, and the sun goeth down, and hasteth[3] to his place where he arose.

6 The[h] wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north; it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits.

7 All[i] the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again.[4]

8 All[j] things are full of labour; man cannot utter it: [k]the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.[5]

A.M. cir. 3029. B.C. cir. 975.

9 ¶ The[l] thing that hath been, it is that which shall be; and that which is done, is that which shall be done: and there is no new thing under the sun.

10 Is there any thing whereof it may be said, See, this is new? [m]it hath been already of old time, which was before us.

11 There[n] is no remembrance of former things; neither shall there be any remembrance of things that are to come with those that shall come after.[6]

12 ¶ I[o] the Preacher was king over Israel in Jerusalem:

13 And[p] I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom concerning all things that are done under heaven: [q]this sore travail hath God given to the sons of man, to be exercised therewith.[7]

14 I[r] have seen all the works that are done under the sun; and, behold, all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

15 That[s] which is crooked cannot be made straight; and that which is wanting[8] cannot be numbered.

2 The first two chapters of this book bear the aspect of a personal confession, the record of the writer's experience. The great burden of it is vanity—the vanity of everything earthly. He searches after happiness, but his search is vain. He searches after wisdom, but he only finds sorrow; for the utmost limit of human wisdom is the grave. The conclusion he arrives at is, that man ought to be contented, so far as this life is concerned, with the calm, prudent, and rational enjoyment of such things as are placed within his reach.—P.

A fond dream of this world, he remarks, is to possess the immortality of renown. CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Vanity—a vapour, emptiness, an object destitute of real good, a statement destitute of truth—an idol, because destitute of that life and power which its ignorant worshippers ascribe to it. C.

Ver. 4. For ever. This earth abideth through 'all generations;' and 'we, according to God's promise, look for new heavens and a new earth,' 2 Pe. 3.13, so that the earth literally 'abideth for ever.' C.

Ver. 9. There is no new thing under the sun. There is nothing new in nature, in moral principles, in sciences, or in arts. New discoveries are but the adoption of principles already in full operation in nature, or the revival of things forgotten. New combinations and applications, however, of old principles there may be, and this is the utmost novelty that human ingenuity may claim. C.

Ver. 13. I gave my heart to seek, &c. Not by vain philosophy, falsely called wisdom; but by that which begins in the 'fear of the Lord,' and embraces all that is revealed of the 'manifold wisdom of God' in Jesus Christ, Ps. 111. 10: Ep. 3. 10. C.

Ver. 15. A world where everything crooked, inconvenient, annoying, adverse, could be made straight—and where everything wanting in wishes, desires, accomplishments, possessions, could be obtained—would not be suited to the present fallen state of man. God has therefore in mercy, while he inflicted the curse, suited this 'sore travail' as a check to the natural and a discipline to the renewed man. C.

Ver. 17. Madness—sometimes applied to great and unreasonable anger; more frequently to persons who understand and can discourse well upon all subjects but one. And such ever is the mere intellectual and moral man, wise upon all subjects but one, the knowledge of God in Christ, 1 Co. 1. 18–24; 2 Co. 5. 19, 20. C.

Ver. 18. The reason of this is that human wisdom can only demonstrate the vanity of all earthly things. It proves that pleasure is short-lived, that fame soon passes away, that wealth cannot prolong life, that no source of human enjoyment is or can be lasting. The more man knows of these things—the more he reflects upon them, if he have no higher source of happiness, the more miserable must he become. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How feelingly a true penitent, from his own experience, preaches that vanity and vexation which attend created enjoyments! All things indeed in nature concur to manifest this humbling truth, though it is very hard to convince most men of it: for, notwithstanding the perpetual flux, returns, and oblivion with which created things are marked, we are too apt to be resting in them. Neither our own observation nor experience, nor the dictates of the Spirit of ing, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten [u]more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem; yea, my heart had great[v] experience[9] of wisdom and knowledge.

17 And[x] I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly: I perceived that this also is vexation of spirit.

18 For[y] in much wisdom is much grief; and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow.

CHAPTER II.

1 The vanity of human courses in the pursuits of pleasure. 12 Though the wise be better than the fool, yet both have one event. 18 The vanity of human labour, in leaving it they know not to whom. 24 Nothing better than joy in our labour; but that is God's gift to the good only.

I SAID[a] in mine heart, Go to now, [b]I will prove thee with mirth; therefore enjoy pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I[c] said of laughter, It is mad; and of mirth, What doeth it?

3 I[d] sought in mine heart [1]to give myself unto wine,[2] (yet [e]acquainting mine heart with wisdom,) and to lay hold on folly, till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven all the days of their [3]life.[4]

4 I[g] made me great works; I [h]builded me houses; [i]I planted me vineyards:

5 I[j] made me gardens and orchards, and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits:

6 I[k] made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees:

7 I[l] got me servants and maidens, and had servants[5] born in my house; [m]also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me:

8 I[o] gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: [p]I gat me men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments,[6] and that of all sorts.

9 So[q] I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And[r] whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy: for my heart rejoiced in all my labour; and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then[s] I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do; and, behold, [t]all was vanity and vexation of spirit, and [u]there was no profit under the sun.

* This is no Epicurean assertion, insinuation, or objection, as some imagine. There is literally nothing better for a man than thus to eat, drink, and enjoy. (1) There is nothing better for his health and strength of body. (2) There is nothing better for his soul; for if he 'enjoy good' in his eating and drinking, both have been 'sanctified by the word and prayer,' 1 Ti. 4. 5; and both he has used to the 'glory of God,' doing 'all in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ,' 1 Co. 10. 31. But are not immortality and glory better? Ro.2.7. Yes, yes, undoubtedly; but immortality and glory are not 'under the sun,' the limit of this life and world, to which Solomon's inquiry is here confined. See ch.1.3; 2.3,11,18,20,22.—C.

12 ¶ And [v]I turned myself to behold wisdom, and madness, and [7]folly:[8] for what can the man do that cometh after the king? even that which hath been already done.[9]

13 Then I saw [z]that wisdom[1] excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness.

14 The[y] wise man's eyes are in his head; but the fool walketh in darkness: and I myself perceived also [z]that one event[2] happeneth to them all.

15 Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me;[3] and [a]why was I then more wise? Then I said in my heart, that this also is vanity.[4]

16 For[b] there is no remembrance of the wise more than of the fool for ever; seeing that which now is, in the days to come shall all be forgotten: and [c]how dieth the wise man? as the fool.

17 Therefore[d] I hated life; because the work that is wrought under the sun is grievous unto me: [e]for all is vanity and vexation of spirit.

18 ¶ Yea, I hated [g]all my labour which I had taken[5] under the sun; because [h]I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me:

19 And who knoweth [i]whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have showed myself wise under the sun. This is also [j]vanity.

20 Therefore I went about [k]to cause my heart to despair of all the labour which I took under the sun.[6]

21 For[l] there is a man whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he leave[7] it for his portion. This also is vanity, and a great evil.

22 For[n] what hath man of all his labour, and of the vexation of his heart, wherein he hath laboured under the sun?

23 For[o] all his days are sorrows, and his travail grief; yea, his heart taketh not rest in the night. This is also vanity.

24 ¶ There[p] is nothing better for a man, than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul[8] enjoy good in his [9]labour. This also I saw, that [q]it was from the hand of God.

25 For[r] who can eat, or who else can hasten hereunto, more than I?

26 For[s] God giveth to a man that is good in his sight[1] wisdom, and knowledge, and joy:

God, are credited by us. Take heed, my soul, never more to esteem or desire them as God; never more depend on or delight in them as thy God. If, by all my labours for human knowledge, I can neither satisfy my mind, rectify my nature or lot, nor amend the world, let me study to know Christ and him crucified; thus shall I be changed into the same image from glory to glory. And let this knowledge, which is eternal life, be the chief object of my pursuit.

CHAPTER II. Ver. 1. Enjoy pleasure. Not sinful pleasure, for then could not wisdom remain, see ver. 9; but the legitimate pleasures derived from useful labour, permanent improvements, and the social intercourse of well-ordered society. C.

Ver. 3. To lay hold on folly. That childish pursuit of toys and amusements, to the rejection of more important objects and pursuits—and which must be seized and examined 'as it flies,' because ever changing in object and fashion. C.

Ver. 8. The last clause some are disposed to translate 'wives and concubines,' a sense to which the words may be strained; but which the wisdom claimed in this inquiry, ver. 9, could by no means tolerate. C.

Ver. 11. How is the joy of ver. 10 to be reconciled with the vexation of ver. 11? Simply thus: all this joy, so far as derived from all his labour, was, when examined by the light of wisdom, nothing but vanity, because it had no real profit; and nothing but vexation, because inseparably mingled with disappointments. C.

Ver. 17. Therefore I hated life. But not with the hatred of a selfish misanthrope or exhausted sensualist, for where then had been wisdom? ver. 9: but with the hatred of a well-instructed and experienced believer, according to the word of our Lord, Lu. 14. 26; Jn. 12. 25. C.

Ver. 23. And a merciful dispensation it is, though arising out of the curse; for the heart, when it findeth 'no rest in the night,' is thereby instructed to draw near to Jesus, who alone can give it rest, Mat. 11. 28. C.

Ver. 25. The best Hebrew MSS. concur with the evident sense of the passage, in reading for 'more than I'—'without him,' that is, without God's gift. C.

A GLIMPSE OF SOLOMON'S POOLS. [ECCLESIASTES, ii : 6.]—"I made me pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees." There are three of these pools, and above them is a large building which we see in the picture, a sort of half castle and half tavern, which is said to be of Saracenic origin. To the west of this there is a spring, which, in connection with three others, supplies the pools with water. These pools are partly excavated in the rocky bed of the valley, and partly built of large stones. They are so arranged that the bottom of each pool is higher than the top of the one next below it. In this way it is possible to fill every pool with water. According to Josephus, there was a city near Bethlehem which had gardens and rivulets of water, to which Solomon was in the habit of taking a morning drive. These pools are about three miles southwest of Bethlehem.

but to the sinner he giveth travail, to gather, and to heap up, that [t]he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

CHAPTER III.

1 By the necessary change of times, vanity is added to human travail. 11 There is an excellency in God's works. 16 But as for man, God shall judge his works there, and here he shall be like a beast.

TO every[a] thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under the heaven:[1]

2 A[b] time to be born,[2] and a time to die: a[c] time to plant, and a time to pluck up that which is planted:

6 A time to get,[5] and a time to lose: a time to keep, and [j]a time to cast away:

7 A [k]time to rend,[6] and a time to sew: [l]a [i]time to keep silence, and a time to speak:

8 A[n] time to love, and a time to hate: a time of war, and a time of peace.

9 What[o] profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth?

12 ¶ I[t] know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and [u]to do good in his life.

REFLECTIONS.—Numerous are the contrivances of men to find that in creatures which they should seek, and can only find, in God himself. But how vain and vexing are their diversified, their unnumbered, their utmost attempts! Till our souls return to God in Christ, as our ALL and IN ALL, they will be always like birds wandering from their nests. Thrice happy are they to whom God gives grace to take all things from him; to enjoy him in all things, and all things in him; and to use all things for his glory, and as means of attaching their heart to him and his ways.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1–11. However disjointed, useless, and afflictive the events of Providence may appear to us, God has connected them together in the most amazing beauty and harmony, and orders the season of each as tends most to advance his glory and the good of the people. And whatever worldly wisdom men may have, they will never be capable of comprehending the astonishing extent of the mysteries which God exhibits to their view in his works of creation and providence. 12, 13. It is therefore best in itself, and a benefit from God, to use worldly enjoyments moderately, and to improve them for the advantage of others. 14. God, in his wisdom and providence, seeks to train and discipline men in righteousness, and therefore we ought not to quarrel with but kindly submit to his pleasure. 15. In every age God, by new returns of things, governs the world with great uniformity of appearances. 16, 17. The very power which he has bestowed upon men as a remedy for grievances, is often used to oppress and injure the innocent; and therefore there must be a future general judgment by God himself, in which all things shall be rectified, by clearing the innocent, rewarding the righteous, and condemning the wicked. 18–21. Affected with these views, I wished that God would make men, particularly those who haughtily oppress others, to consider how mean and brutish they are, and to ponder the nature of that immortal soul which chiefly distinguishes them from beasts, whose life entirely vanishes in death.

Ver. 1. 'A time for every purpose,' unfavourable as well as favourable to the man that thinks to get profit of his labour; that is, solid, abiding satisfaction, which he can call, and keep as his own: the one stands at all times over against the other, Ec. 7. 14. C.

Ver. 2. A time to plant, &c. Among the horrors of war is the destruction of woods. A great man who had been at much pains to ornament a wild mountain district with buildings and trees, exclaimed when all had been destroyed, 'I care nothing for the house—I can soon raise a new one; but the trees! the trees! when will they be grown again!'—Note, How grateful should a people be when a land continues to enjoy peace and advance in improvement! This also is of God. C.

Ver. 8. A time to hate. Not a time permitted to hate, but which the carnal mind so perverts, Tit. 3. 3. C.

Ver. 11. More correctly, 'He hath also set eternity in their heart, so that no man can find out the work that God doeth from the beginning to the end.' Luther remarks on this passage: 'Man cannot hit upon the work which God does: that is, no man can know beforehand the hour which is ordained above: and however much he may plague himself, he can never know when it will begin or come to an end. It behoves us therefore to say, O Lord, to thee belongs the supreme direction, in thy hand it rests entirely to order and settle everything in the future; under thy control is my life and my death; so long as I need my life, so long thou givest it. And inasmuch as in respect of them no care or thought is of any use, I will act then in regard to other gifts, using them as they come; care and anxiety I will cast to the winds, and commit all to thee.' P.——Everything beautiful. Among the innumerable evidences of the being and goodness of God, is the beauty which he has so widely diffused. The heavens, the earth, the plants; the birds, the beasts, the insects, the fishes; the eye of affection, and the smile of friendship—all are beautiful—so suited not merely for being, but for well-being, that it is impossible for any but the fool, Ps. 14. 1, to observe them, and remain insensible to the perfections of the Maker of all. C.

Ver. 17. God shall judge the righteous and the wicked. From the present unequal distribution of good and evil, some philosophers have attempted to deduce the doctrine of a future judgment; while others have replied, that if the distribution have continued unequal through so many thousand years, there is therefore the more reason to conclude it will so continue for ever. In the face of this incapacity on the one hand, and sophistry on the other, revelation shows it to be not a questionable inequality of good and evil, but the long-suffering of God with sinners; and establishes the doctrine of future judgment upon his word of truth, and attributes of wisdom and justice. C.

Ver. 22. Rejoice in his own works. True joy in a man's own works lies (1) In the humble acknowledgment that he is 'an unprofitable servant,' Lu. 17. 10, for joy ariseth not from a proud assertion of merit. (2) In discovering that while his own works produce no righteousness, a believer is 'justified without the deeds of the law,' Ro. 3. 28. (3) In finding that, in all he has wrought, not he but grace has been the real worker, 1 Co. 15. 10. C.

REFLECTIONS.—We live in a world of changes; but all things outside man's will are governed by God's will. It is absurd then to choose it for our portion, or to take up our rest in it. Readily should we believe, that whatever God has given us is best for us, accommodate ourselves to it, and wait with patience for the full unravelling of what seems intricate and perplexed. Yea, to be entirely satisfied with God's providential disposals is highly necessary, as they neither can nor need their oppressors there was power, but they had no comforter.

2 Wherefore[b] I praised the dead which are already dead more than the living which are yet alive.

3 Yea,[c] better is he than both they which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.[2]

4 ¶ Again, [d]I considered all travail, and every right [3]work, [e]that for this a man is envied of[4] his neighbour. This is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

5 ¶ The[f] fool foldeth his hands together, and eateth his own flesh.

6 ¶ Better[h] is an handful with quietness, than both the hands full with travail and vexation of spirit.

7 ¶ Then I returned, and I saw vanity under the sun.

8 There is one alone, and there is not a second; yea, he hath neither child nor brother: yet[i] is there no end of all his labour; neither is his eye satisfied with riches; neither saith he, For[j] whom do I labour, and bereave my soul of good?[5] This is also vanity, yea, it is a sore travail.

9 ¶ Two[k] are better than one; because they have a good reward for their labour.

10 For[l] if they fall, the one will lift up his fellow: but woe to him that is alone when he falleth; for he hath not another to help him up.

11 Again, [m]if two lie together, then they have heat: but how can one be warm alone?

12 And if one prevail against him, two shall withstand him; and [o]a threefold cord is not quickly broken.

13 ¶ Better[p] is a poor and a wise child than an old and foolish king, who[6] will no more be admonished.[7]

14 For[q] out of prison he cometh to reign; whereas also [r]he that is born in his kingdom becometh poor.

CHAPTER V.

1 Cautions against abuse in divine service, 8 against murmuring at oppression. 9 The vanity of riches. 18 Joy in riches is the gift of God.

KEEP thy[a] foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear [b]than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

2 Be[c] not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing[1] before God: for God is in heaven,[2] and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words [d]be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and [e]a fool's voice is known by multitude of words.[3]

4 When[g] thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it; [h]for he hath no pleasure in fools: pay that which thou hast vowed.[4]

5 Better[i] is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay.

6 Suffer[j] not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin; neither say thou before [k]the angel,[5] that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and [l]destroy the work of thine hands?

7 For[n] in the multitude of dreams and many words there are also divers vanities:[6] but[o] fear thou God.

8 ¶ If[p] thou seest the oppression of the poor, and violent perverting of judgment and justice in a province, marvel not at the [7]matter: [q]for he that is higher than the highest regardeth; and [r]there be higher than they.

9 ¶ Moreover,[s] the profit of the earth is for all: the king himself is served by the field.

be altered. And let us study to answer his end in his providences, which is to make us truly religious. Amidst all the changes which we either feel or fear, let us believe and acknowledge the inviolable steadiness of his government. Let us constantly live in the faith of his future judgment of the world, that no oppression may sink our spirits, and no power nor honour render us proud, mischievous, or impious. Let us always maintain a deep sense of our own meanness, stupidity, and unruliness before God; and study to use whatever God gives us for our own comfort, and for the real benefit of others.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1. From viewing the various works and judgment-seats of men, and the common graves of all living things, 'I returned' to examine the oppressions produced in these works, and legalized by the imperfect administration of human justice; and I found the oppressed and the oppressor alike comfortless.—Note, The books of Judges, of Kings, and of the Prophets abundantly testify, that when a people are oppressed, it is by God's judgments upon their sins; while the examples of Pharaoh, Jeroboam, Belshazzar, and others, equally testify that the oppressor is judicially given over to his own ways, that he, in his turn, may become a warning to others in power. C.

Ver. 9. Almost all great works have been accomplished by two united spirits. Moses and Aaron, Joshua and Caleb, David and Jonathan, Elijah and Elisha, are striking examples in the Old Testament; and our Saviour is recorded in the New Testament to have sent his disciples 'two and two,' with his divine message of salvation. C.

Ver. 16. 'There is no end to all the people, to all by whom he is made a leader: but they that come after shall not rejoice in him.' That is, the popularity even of the son, not of an old and foolish, but of a young and wise king, may soon pass away: such is the instability of human opinion, and the vanity of human praise. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Into what a hell hath sin turned our earth! Men are often proud of transforming themselves into devils for tormenting their brethren. Often, through want of help and comfort, a man's life is made worse than death or non-existence. And desperately wicked are men when even right and useful works do but rouse their envy. But great is the mercy that God, with whom every right work is accepted, will be our final Judge. Let me then be diligent in business, and work the work of God while it is called to-day. Sloth of any kind tends to make men poor and miserable. But unhappy are they who are selfish and covetous; and who, without any temptation, deny themselves the comforts of life, and make themselves slaves to business. It is absurd to covet all to themselves, when friendship and social connections are much more calculated to their help, comfort, and improvement. Kings are often but a plague to themselves and their restless people; and tottering honours are rather burdens than advantages.

CHAPTER V. Ver. 1. Keep thy foot. An allusion to uncovering the feet in the sanctuary of God's presence, Ex. 3. 5. The emblem of putting off earthly thoughts and defilements, as it is written, 'Having these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all pollution of the flesh and of the spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.' C.

Ver. 6. Suffer not thy mouth to cause thy flesh to sin. Let no rash vow of your lips become the occasion of tempting you to any of the works of the flesh, such as covetous regrets after what you have vowed, or proud rivalry in religious offerings with your richer neighbours. See 1 Jn. 2. 16; Ga. 5. 19. C.

Ver. 9. The profit of the earth is for all. The poor often enjoying, through an eager and healthy appetite, more than the rich who never knew hunger. So equally does God distribute his favours, and so many the compensations for human wants, ver. 12. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Fearfully are men subjected to vanity; it enters not only into all their outward possessions, but even into their worship! Great need have we to take heed to our hearts, to our lips, and to our whole behaviour, in our religious performances, that they may not become means of dishonouring God and destroying ourselves. But, alas! often are they performed in a foolish and inconsiderate manner, our minds being no more serious in them than in an idle dream; and vows are often rashly made, and no less readily broken, in the view of Jesus and his angels and ministers. Very necessary is the constant faith and deep impression of God's greatness and omniscience, and the future judgment, to make us serious and cirfied with silver; nor he that loveth abundance with increase. This is also vanity.

11 When[u] goods increase, they are increased that eat them: [v]and what good is there to the owners thereof, saving the beholding of them with their eyes?

12 The[w] sleep of a labouring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep.

13 There[y] is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, [z]riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But[a] those riches perish by evil travail:[8] and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 As[b] he came forth of his mother's womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

17 All[d] his days also he eateth in darkness, and [e]he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.[1]

18 ¶ Behold that which I have seen: [g]it is good and comely[2] for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun all the days[3] of his life, which God giveth him; for it is [h]his portion.

19 Every[i] man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given him power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice[4] in his labour; [j]this is the gift of God.

20 For[5] he shall not much remember the days of his life;[6] because [k]God answereth him in the joy of his heart.[7]

CHAPTER VI.

1 The vanity and misery of riches without use. 3 Of children, 6 and old age without riches. 7 The vanity of sight and insatiable desires. 10 The conclusion of vanities.

THERE is[a] an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men;

2 A[b] man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth, yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it. [c]This is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 ¶ If[d] a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that [e]the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and [g]also that he have no burial;[1] I say that [h]an untimely birth is better than he:

4 For[i] he[2] cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover, [j]he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other.

6 Yea, [k]though he live a thousand [3]years twice told, yet [l]hath he seen no good: [n]do not all go to one place?

7 ¶ All[o] the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the appetite[4] is not filled.

8 For[p] what hath the wise more than the fool?[5] what hath the poor, that [q]knoweth to walk before the living?

9 Better[r] is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire.[6] This[s] is also vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 ¶ That[t] which hath been is named already, and it is known [u]that it is [7]man; [v]neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.[8]

11 Seeing there be [x]many things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

12 For [y]who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vain life[9] which he spendeth as [z]a shadow? [a]for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

CHAPTER VII.

1 Remedies against vanity are, a good name, 2 mortification, 7 patience, 11 wisdom. 23 The difficulty of getting wisdom.

A GOOD[a] name is better than precious ointment; and [b]the day of death than the day of one's birth.

cumspect in our worship, and for enabling us to behold, or bear up under, oppression and persecution. God makes the highest to live on the same simple things as the poorest. There is very little to profit or please, and much more to hurt and vex in riches, than we commonly think. The rich man's servant often enjoys more benefit by his wealth than the rich man himself, while he suffers none of the vexation! Nay, the covetous miser gets no comfort in his wealth, and it is swept away, so that his children never come to the possession of it. Much happier is he who receives whatever he has as God's free gift, and uses it to his glory. Little is he concerned at the evils which befall him in life when God favours him with solid comfort.

CHAPTER VI. Ver. 7, 8. Whatever wealth men gain by their labour is only available for meat, drink, or the like; but can never satisfy their soul, or even their avarice. And in respect to sensual gratification, fools may be as happy as the wisest; and even a poor man, who has common sense and prudence, may, by his industry, render himself and family as happy as the richest. 9, 10. A comfortable enjoyment of that which we have is far preferable to an insatiable desire and restless pursuit after that which we have not.—And, let our condition be what it may on earth, we shall still remain poor frail creatures, subject to manifold miseries: and it will be the utmost wickedness and madness to complain of our lot, or strive with God to get it rectified.

Ver. 2. If 'God giveth him not power to eat,' why doth he, by his Word and Spirit, 'yet find fault?' Because this denial of power to enjoy is not an evil disposition infused, but a judicial sentence passed upon his covetousness—the warning, if he repent not, of another sentence when he will lift up his eyes being in torments. C.

Ver. 6. Do not all go to one place? Not all spirits, of whom here there is no mention; but all bodies that must return to one thing, the dust; to one place, the grave. C.

Ver. 8. What hath the poor that knoweth to walk among the living? He sees the world, ver. 9, in all its beauty; and though he live on charity, yet if his desires be subdued to his station, he has more enjoyment in the mere sight of mountains, and hills, and fields, and fair dwellings, than their owner can obtain if subject to 'wandering desires.' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men's riches are often a remarkable curse to them, and render them really more unhappy than the poorest. It is wretched to have wealth and yet no heart to use it for our necessary accommodations in life. And empty are all earthly enjoyments, which can afford no satisfaction to a soul. How unhappy do some men make themselves by the insatiable nature of their own lusts! And yet it is very hard to draw them from a sinful attachment to earthly things, or to persuade them to use them aright; and especially to bring them to receive the almighty Saviour, and his unsearchable riches, for their everlasting treasure and portion.

CHAPTER VII. Ver. 1. A good reputation is of more advantage for rendering us useful and happy than all the riches, pleasures, and honours of this world: and the day of death, which frees men from the miseries of this world, is preferable to the day of birth, which introduces into a life in which the enjoyments do not sufficiently balance the evils of it. 2–6. It is far safer and more profitable to attend occasions of mourning and faithful reproof, which conduce to make men thoughtful of death and eternity, and render them wise unto salvation; than of revelling, mirth, and folly, which seduce men into heedless dissipation. 7. Grievous oppression will provoke even wise men to unseemly rage and behaviour; and bribes received will corrupt the judgment and pervert the affections of the best. 8. We ought more to regard how a thing turns out at last, than what promising appearances it has at first. 10. In bewailing the evils of our times, we ought carefully to avoid all murmuring at the dispensations of Providence, as if they were not equal. 11. When rich

2 ¶ It[c] is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.

3 Sorrow[d] is better than laughter: for by the sadness of the countenance the heart is made better.

4 The[e] heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; [g]but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth.

5 It[h] is better to hear the rebuke of the wise, than for a man to hear the song of fools:

6 For [i]as the crackling[1] of thorns under a pot, so is the laughter of the fool.[2] This also is vanity.

7 ¶ Surely [j]oppression maketh a wise man mad; [k]and a gift destroyeth the heart.[3]

8 Better[l] is the end of a thing[4] than the beginning thereof; and [m]the patient in spirit is better than the proud in spirit.

9 Be[o] not hasty in thy spirit to be angry: for anger resteth in the bosom of fools.

10 Say[p] not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these? for thou dost not inquire wisely[5] concerning this.[6]

11 ¶ Wisdom is good [q]with an inheritance;[7] and by it there is profit to them that see the sun.

12 For[r] wisdom is a defence,[8] and money is a defence; but the excellency of knowledge is, that[s] wisdom[9] giveth life to them that have it.

13 Consider the work[1] of God: for [t]who can make that straight which he hath made crooked?

14 In[u] the day of prosperity be joyful, [v]but in the day of adversity consider: God also hath [w]set[2] the one over against the other, to the end that man [y]should find nothing after him.[3]

15 All[z] things have I seen in the days of my vanity: there is a just man that perisheth in his righteousness, and [a]there is a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedness.

16 Be[b] not righteous over-much; neither make thyself over-wise:[4] why[c] shouldest thou destroy[5] thyself?

17 Be[d] not over-much wicked;[6] neither be thou foolish: [e]why shouldest thou die before thy time?[7]

18 It[g] is good that thou shouldest take hold of this; yea, also from this withdraw not thine hand: [h]for he that feareth God shall come forth of them all.

19 Wisdom[i] strengtheneth the wise more than ten mighty men which are in the city.

20 For[j] there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not.

21 Also[8] take[k] no heed unto all words that are spoken, lest thou hear thy servant curse[9] thee:

22 For[l] oftentimes also thine own heart knoweth that thou thyself likewise hast cursed others.

23 ¶ All[n] this have I proved by wisdom:[1] I said, [o]I will be wise; but it was far from me.

24 That[p] which is far off, and exceeding deep, who can find it out?

25 ¶ I[q] applied mine heart[2] to know, and to search, and to seek out wisdom, and the reason of things, and to know the wickedness of folly, even of foolishness and madness:

26 And[r] I find more bitter than death the woman[3] whose heart is snares and nets, and her hands as bands: whoso pleaseth God[4] shall escape from her; but the sinner shall be taken by her.

27 Behold, this have I found, (saith [s]the Preacher,) counting one by one, to find out the account;[5]

28 Which yet my soul seeketh, but I find not: [t]one man among a thousand[6] have I found; but a woman among [u]all those have I not found.

29 Lo, this only have I found, [v]that God hath made man upright; [z]but they have sought out many inventions.

men are truly wise, they may do much good to others with their wealth in this world; 12. For both wisdom and wealth may be laid out for our protection and safety; but it is true piety and prudence that promote spiritual comfort and eternal happiness. 13, 14. To prevent murmuring, we ought carefully to observe how wise, just, and powerful God's operations are, and consider ourselves incapable of changing, even the most afflictive events of Providence, to our liking. In the time of prosperity we should therefore acknowledge God's goodness, and enjoy the benefit of it; and in the day of adversity we ought to consider the nature, author, and end of our afflictions, so as to make a good use of them: for God has disposed them in such variety, that none might be able to foresee future events in his particular lot. 15. I have often observed the most pious men sorely afflicted, and apparently miserable in this world; and the most wicked long enjoy an outward prosperity. 16–18. It is therefore necessary that men should avoid all needless scrupulosity and rash zeal not warranted by God's Word, lest it bring them into unnecessary troubles;—and especially should we avoid, with the utmost care, presumptuous sinning, lest, however he bear with others, it should provoke God quickly to cut us off, and send us to hell in our wickedness.—It is of great use to receive heartily and practise carefully this advice: for it is the true fearer of God who, by a circumspect regard to his law, shall escape both the extremes and their evil consequences. 19, 20. True piety and prudence tend more to direct, help, and protect men, than all human helps; even though the best are liable to manifold failings.—24. Human wisdom may judge of things present and obvious, but not of things future and mysterious. 25. I attempted a most careful and comprehensive search into God's providences, and men's counsels, conduct, and sinfulness; 26. And with grief and shame, I find that nothing more effectually entices and fixes men in guilt and ruin than a whorish woman. It is only by the remarkable mercy of God, and the most earnest and watchful piety, that one can either avoid or escape from her temptations; and often it is that those who have otherwise offended him are ruined by her influence. 27, 28. Here and there a truly honest man may be found among my courtiers: but a modest, plain-hearted, humble, and sincere woman have I not found among all my thousand wives and concubines.

Ver. 1. Precious ointment. Many unguents were of very great value among the Jews, as appears from Jn. 12. 3, where a single pound was estimated at about £9, 13*s.* 6*d.* British. Taking then a Roman penny at 7½*d.* or 7¾*d.* for the daily wages of a labourer, Mat. 20. 12, 13, and comparing it with modern wages in the neighbourhood of cities, the price of the ointment will be greatly increased.—Note, There is no name really good but that of a 'son of God,' 1 Jn. 3. 1; and to such a one, but to no other, the day of death is better than the day of his birth, Job 3. 5. C.

Ver. 15. Solomon prophetically foresees, and in this verse describes, Christ the only Son of man that ever had righteousness, ver. 20; Ro. 3. 10; and, by necessary consequence, the only one that could perish in 'his righteousness.' The second clause of the verse foresees and describes Antichrist, 2 Th. 2. 8. C.

Ver. 16. Be not righteous over-much. Be not a justifier over-much—that is, a self-justifier. Ro. 1. 17; 3. 22, 26; 5. 18, 19, 21; 10. 4; 1 Co. 1. 30 will discover what is the only true and sufficient righteousness; while Lu. 18. 9–14; Ro. 10. 3; Phi. 3. 9 will discover the basis of that 'over much' righteousness upon which Pharisees built of old, and upon which the Romanists have raised their acts of supererogation—works even beyond what were necessary for the workers' own salvation, and therefore applicable to the salvation of others. C.

Ver. 28. The 'one man' found, being perfect Christ; the woman sought is a perfect church. See Ga. 4. 26, 27, 31; Re. 12. 1, 6, 14–17. This scriptural interpretation, ch. 8. 1, of Solomon's parabolic inquiry, presents no splenetic record of his own experience; no harsh and more than questionable sentence on the relative intellectual and religious attainments and character of the sexes; consequently no unfilial stricture upon his own mother; no cruel and unfounded satire on half the population of the earth. C.

REFLECTIONS.—A truly good character is very valuable, and ought to be sought for and maintained with the greatest care. Happy is the death of those who die in the Lord! Let us then live much in the serious consideration of our last end. Christian reproofs are highly requisite to make or keep us grave and serious,

CHAPTER VIII.

2 Kings are greatly to be respected. 6 The divine providence is to be observed. 12 It is better with the godly in adversity, than with the wicked in prosperity. 16 The work of God is unsearchable.

WHO is[a] as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? [b]A man's wisdom maketh his face to shine,[1] and the [2]boldness[3] of his face shall be changed.

2 ¶ I[c] counsel thee to keep the king's commandment, and that [d]in regard of the oath of God.

3 Be[e] not hasty to go out of his sight: stand not in an evil thing; [g]for he doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.

4 Where[h] the word of a king is, there is power; and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

5 Whoso[i] keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing; [j]and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.[4]

6 ¶ Because[k] to every purpose there is time and judgment, therefore the misery of man is great upon [5]him.[6]

7 For[l] he knoweth not that which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be?[7]

8 ¶ There is no man that hath power [m]over the spirit to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge[8] in that war;[9] neither[o] shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All[p] this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another [q]to his own hurt.

10 And[r] so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from [s]the place of the holy,[1] and [t]they were forgotten in the city where they had so done. This is also vanity.

11 ¶ Because[u] sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 ¶ Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that [v]it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which [x]are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

14 There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; [y]that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the [z]work of the [2]wicked: again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the [a]work of the [3]righteous. I said, that this also is vanity.

15 ¶ Then[b] I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun, than [c]to eat, and to drink, and to be merry; for that shall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

16 ¶ When[d] I applied mine heart to know wisdom, and to see the business that is done upon the earth; (for [e]also there is that neither day nor night seeth sleep with his eyes;)[4]

17 Then I beheld all the work of God, [g]that a man cannot find out the work that is done under the sun; because though a man labour to seek it out, yet he shall not find it: yea farther, though a wise man think to know it, yet shall he not be able to find it.

CHAPTER IX.

1 Like things happen to good and bad. 4 There is a necessity of death unto men. 7 Comfort is all their portion in this life. 11 God's providence ruleth over all. 13 Wisdom is better than strength.

FOR all[a] this I considered in my heart,[1] even to declare all this, [b]that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of amidst so much folly and so many flashes of vain mirth as take place in the world. The very worst of things effectually work for the good of the saints. And a humble and patient resignation to the will of God makes us easy under the most grievous adversity and oppression. Christian wisdom and prudence tend greatly to our direction, safety, happiness, and strength. —They teach us to view God's hand in all that befalls us; to accommodate ourselves to every providence as it comes; and neither to be offended with the prosperity of the wicked nor the adversity of the godly in this life; to guard against all extremes: and, under a deep sense of our own faults, to carry ourselves mildly toward others who are overtaken in a fault. How short-sighted are the wisest of mortals with respect to the most important objects! But great is the mercy if they are brought to see their own leading follies and crimes, and, by the sight thereof, are led to repentance, to a deep sense of the riches of God's grace, and to search out the sinfulness of their heart and nature, till they apprehend themselves utterly vile before God.

CHAPTER VIII. Ver. 1. How few are truly wise, and can rightly take up or expound the words or works of God? And yet it is wisdom that renders a man truly honourable, mild, and majestic. 2. The laws of a king ought to be obeyed, not only from fear of the penalty, but from regard to God, whose deputy he is, and to the oath of allegiance sworn to him by the name and in the presence of God, as witness and guardian of it. 3. We must behave ourselves submissively; and never, through passion or discontent, withdraw from his service or cast off our allegiance; for, his power being so great, it is very dangerous to contend with him. 4. A king has power to enforce his commands; and none can oppose him without apparent danger. 5. He who prudently complies with the king's pleasure in lawful things, shall avoid the trouble and danger which he would otherwise incur. And it will require wisdom to direct in what time and manner we may deal with him to the best advantage. 6. For through inattention to the proper time and to proper direction in managing matters, men bring much trouble upon themselves: 7. For they are generally ignorant what things are to happen, and of the time in which what they expect will come to pass. 8. None, neither by force nor entreaty, nor by wickedness, are capable of preventing the removal of their soul from this world in one way or another, so it becomes all to be ready. 9. I have observed that rulers by their management often bring guilt and ruin upon themselves. 10. I have observed wicked rulers, notwithstanding the greatest funeral pomp, quickly forgotten in the very city in which they had often, in God's name, administered judgment. So vain and perishing are all the pomp and power of the greatest. 11. Because God in mercy sometimes delays to punish open transgressors of his law, hardened sinners, in a most presumptuous manner, abandon themselves to all manner of mischief and wickedness. 12. But though the sinner's days of reprieve, or even of prosperity, should be prolonged for a time, yet it is only they who truly fear God and walk in his ways that will be happy at last. 13. Wicked despisers of God shall not enjoy the true comforts of life, and shall be quickly hurried into misery here or hereafter. 14. It is, however, afflicting that some eminent saints are reproached, persecuted, and distressed in this world, while some ringleaders in wickedness meet with kind usage and remarkable prosperity. 15. This makes it evident, that nothing is more proper than soberly and thankfully to enjoy what God in his providence bestows upon us in this world, as all the reward that we can gain by our labour. 16, 17. It is best to refrain from curious inquiries into the reasons, ends, and meaning of God's dispensations; for after the most diligent, curious, and persevering search, I find they will still remain unsearchable to men.

Ver. 2–5. That 'the king' was a title of Messiah familiar in the days of Solomon, is obvious from Ps. 2. 6; 21. 1, 4, 6; 45. 1, 6; 98. 6, &c.; and there are such characteristics in this passage as clearly prove that Jesus is 'the King' whom Solomon prophetically honours. Thus in ver. 3, 'He doeth whatsoever pleaseth him.' Now this neither David, nor Solomon, nor Darius, Da. 6. 14, nor indeed the most despotic monarch on earth, ever could effect: then, to Solomon's King none may say, 'What doest thou?' But never was there an earthly king without some one honest enough, or bold enough, or factious enough, to question his acts. Above all, he who keepeth the commandment of Solomon's King 'shall feel no evil,' a lot which no earthly king enjoys himself, nor can bestow upon any of his subjects. But all these things the King in Zion can do, and all these blessings his subjects enjoy. C.

Ver. 9. This hurt arises (1) From the mental perturbation that every ungodly and unkind superior must experience. (2) From that human retaliation which the injustice of despotic rule so often provokes. (3) From these judgments which an all-wise and merciful God who suffers long, does yet in justice finally bring down upon the wicked. C.

Ver. 10. Wickedly ruled 'to their own hurt'—raised, as they imagined, imperishable monuments of their fame—died, and were forgotten—leaving nought but a new proof that 'all is vanity.' C.

Ver. 15. This is no libertine insinuation, as some imagine, but, when scripturally interpreted, a plain statement of an important truth. There is no doubt a 'laughter of fools,' and 'the end of that mirth is heaviness,' Pr. 14. 13; but there is also a mirth which forms an essential or concomitant part of God's worship, Ps. 100. 1, 2; Ne. 8. 6, 9–12; Ja. 5. 3; and it is of that mirth, with the thankful and temperate use of what men 'eat or drink,' that Solomon here speaks. C.

God: [c]no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

2 All[d] things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good, and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as is the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.[2]

3 This[e] is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all; [g]yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart while they live, [h]and after that they go to the dead.

4 ¶ For[i] to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: [j]for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For[k] the living know that they shall die: but [l]the dead know not any [3]thing, [m]neither have they any more a reward; [o]for the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also[p] their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither have they any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

8 Let[r] thy garments be always white;[7] and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 Live[s] joyfully[8] with the wife whom thou lovest all the days of the [t]life of thy vanity, which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: [u]for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whatsoever[v] thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; [z]for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

11 ¶ I[y] returned, and saw under the sun, that

* The sense is, When the occurrences of life are regarded in the light of human reason only—from the stand-point of feeble short-sighted man, then the righteous and wicked appear to be dealt with in exactly the same manner. Both suffer, both die. Sceptics conclude from this that the providential dealings of a just God cannot extend to human acts. But the object of the sacred writer here manifestly is to raise man to a higher stand-point. He is to look to another state—an eternal home and reward for the righteous in heaven. 12 For[b] man also knoweth not his time: as the fishes that are taken in an evil net, and as the birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men [c]snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and [d]it seemed great unto me:

14 There[9] was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man.[1]

16 Then[e] said I, Wisdom is better than strength: [g]nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.[2]

17 The[h] words of wise men are heard in quiet more than the cry of him that ruleth among fools.

18 Wisdom[i] is better than weapons of war: but [j]one sinner[3] destroyeth much good.

REFLECTIONS.—What excellency in himself—usefulness among neighbours—honour among friends—and courage among enemies—the true knowledge and fear of God give to a man! But it is foolish and sinful to disregard the laws of our rulers; to be forward in finding fault with their administrations; to persist in faults pointed out to us; or to neglect proper methods of obtaining redress of our grievances. Subjection to magistrates is highly necessary, not only for conscience' sake, but even for avoiding their wrath and securing our own comfort. Certain and irresistible in themselves, though uncertain in their circumstances, are troubles and death to sinful men. But when we see wicked men prosper while the godly are oppressed, there is need of patience and of looking by faith to the unseen, the eternal issue of things! and, in the meanwhile, to make the best use we can of what we meet with, and leave it to the Lord to comprehend and manage his own mysterious works.

CHAPTER IX. Ver. 1. No man knoweth either love or hatred, &c. No man can tell from prosperity that God loves him, nor from adversity that God hates him. Yet let no one ignorantly say, We have then no means of ascertaining whether God loves us or not. No one can so imagine when he reads Jn. 14. 23; 1 Jn. 3. 13, 19, 21; 4. 13, 16. C.

Ver. 2. The 'one event' that is common to all is death, see last clause of ver. 3; and 'this evil under the sun' exists as a perpetual memorial of the fall of man, an awful warning of 'the judgment to come'—a dungeon of darkness (sorrow) to the wicked, and a door of hope and joy to the children of God. C.

Ver. 4. A living dog is better than a dead lion. The 'dead lion' was the guardian emblem of the throne of Solomon, 2 Ch. 9. 18, 19, and although 'the like were not made in any kingdom,' yet 'a living dog,' though an unclean and despised animal, would by his mere barking or assault have done more to guard the monarch than the twelve dead lions by which the ascent of Solomon's throne was protected. C.

Ver. 5. The memory of them [the dead] is forgotten. Is this consistent with fact? Is the memory of a great man ever forgotten? Yes, always. The memory of a good or a bad man's actions may be preserved in history and trumpeted by fame; but the memory of every man—the memory of personal affection—the only real memory of the man—is altogether forgotten—his children cease to weep for him—and his grandchildren perhaps knew him not. C.

Ver. 10. 'What a life I have spent in laboriously doing nothing!' was the melancholy reflection of a learned man on his death-bed. And so must it be with the most diligent, if he do not embrace the four departments to which Solomon directs the intellectual and active energies—work, device, knowledge, wisdom. Time spent in bodily works but trains an animal; time spent in artful devices but fosters a serpent; time spent in worldly knowledge but collects a library: it is, when neglecting neither of these, man 'applies his heart to wisdom,' that he puts forth 'all his might,' and fulfils, through grace, the great ends of his creation. C.

Ver. 11. Chance. The meaning of this much-abused word may be found by contrasting the end of ver. 11 with the end of ver. 12, where 'evil time' and 'suddenly' are expository of 'time and chance.' Chance therefore signifies, not what is below or above the direction of Providence, but what comes unexpectedly and suddenly upon thoughtless ignorant men. C.

REFLECTIONS.—It is a great mercy to believers that they, and all their works, are in the hand and under the influence of God, their reconciled Father. Yet how often does he use them with as much severity in this world as if they were the most profligate sinners! Great is the mercy that there is an eternity at hand, when Providence so little distinguishes the righteous here in their condition either in life or in death. Remarkable are the advantages which men have in this life for bettering their states, tempers, or hopes. But quickly death puts an end to them all! to all opportunities of preparing for eternity; and to all our intimacies, enjoyments, or affections in this world. What need then have we soberly to relish the comforts of this life, relative to our spirits, our food, our raiment, and our relations. Quickly should we work out our salvation with fear and trembling while we have opportunity, as we know not how soon our soul may be required of us. Carefully should we acknowledge God, and depend on him for direction in all our paths, as without his assistance we can obtain nothing good, but must fall into misery and ruin. Yet how stupid are most men, who neither regard wisdom itself, nor those who thereby do them the greatest services! It is necessary that we should always act from regard to the authority of God, and from a principle of love, as men may perhaps disregard the best works that we can do for them. But much more useful are wise discourses than all the noisy harangues which fools admire. And even one impenitent and presumptuous sinner is often a great plague to a family, a church, or nation.

CHAPTER X. Ver. 1. A little imprudence or wickedness much hurts the character of one who has been reckoned uncommonly wise. 2. A wise man's thee, [a]leave not thy place; for [g]yielding[5] pacifieth great offences.

5 There[h] is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth from[6] the ruler;

6 Folly[i] is set in great [7]dignity, [j]and the rich[8] sit in low place.[9]

7 I[k] have seen servants upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth.

8 He[l] that diggeth a pit shall fall into it; and whoso breaketh an hedge, a serpent shall bite him.

9 Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby.

10 If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength: but [m]wisdom is profitable to direct.

11 Surely [o]the serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babbler[1] is no better.

12 The[p] words of a wise man's mouth are gracious;[2] but[q] the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.

13 The beginning of the words of his mouth is foolishness; and the end of his talk[3] is mischievous madness.

14 A[r] fool also is full of words:[4] a man cannot tell what shall be; and [s]what shall be after him, who can tell him?

15 The[t] labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them, because he knoweth not how to go to the city.[5] understanding and inward abilities are always in readiness to direct him in his work: but a fool is unready in all he does, and knows not how to manage his affairs. 3. Nay, even in the most ordinary business his weakness appears, and he plainly discovers his folly to every one. 4. If the magistrate takes offence at thee, never desert thy station or employment, or withdraw thy subjection: but by submissive and patient carriage endeavour to pacify him. 5–7. Very often, to the great hurt of the subjects, magistrates employ, as their deputies and agents, persons of a weak or mercenary spirit, while persons of ability and true dignity are overlooked and contemned. 8. Both prince and people have need to beware of innovations; for he that endeavours to ensnare and ruin another shall thereby perish himself: and he that passes his due bounds to wrong others, brings unexpected mischief upon himself. 9. He that rashly attempts things too high and hard for him shall be hurt by it; and he that deals with men of stubborn tempers endangers himself. 10. If a man do not use proper means for his work, it will cost him so much more labour and pains. Wisdom is therefore necessary and profitable to direct in the choice and use of means. 11. As unenchanted serpents are disposed to bite, so rash and talkative persons are sure to do mischief with their words unless they be wisely prevented. 12. Wise men's words being pious, friendly, and profitable, procure them favour: but foolish, slanderous, and sinful speeches suddenly and irrecoverably ruin a man. 13. A fool at the first talks in a useless and impertinent manner; and at length he grows insolent and abusive, sticking at nothing wicked or malicious. 14. A fool pours forth his incoherent babblings, and pretends to know everything secret or future; and no one can tell what he will say next, or what mischief his foolish speeches may produce. 15. Fools find their work tedious and wearisome, because they want sense and prudence to manage the most ordinary business, even where the rules are ever so plain. 16. It is a great misery to a nation when their magistrates are ignorant, wilful, and unexperienced, and minding their sensual pleasures when they should be employed about the business of their office. 17. But happy is that nation whose magistrates are of truly excellent dispositions and endowments, and who use the enjoyments of life, not to satisfy inordinate lusts, but to fit them for their business. 18. Through sloth and indolence, estates, families, and nations are gradually reduced to wretchedness and ruin. 19. Even feasting affords but a very slight and transient pleasure; but a plentiful estate procures every outward advantage: we should therefore beware of spending it in luxury. 20. It is neither lawful nor safe to contemn, reproach, or wish evil to magistrates, however secretly, as it may be very quickly and surprisingly discovered to them.

Ver. 1. Folly. Solomon means by folly, (1) Childishness, Pr. 22. 11, that is, waywardness of temper, being easily disturbed; preference of toys to things of real value; and preference of amusement and self-will to learning and due control. (2) Want of prudent forecast, Pr. 13. 14. (3) Deceitfulness, Pr. 14. 3. (4) A hasty temper, Pr. 14. 29. (5) Pleasure in other men's folly, Pr. 15. 21. (6) Rejecting good advice, Ec. 4. 13. When folly is employed to designate the highest criminality, as De. 22. 21; Jos. 7. 15; Ho. 2. 10, it can easily be reduced to one or more of these heads. C.

Ver. 2. The wise man honours his heart; that is, his affections and their objects, by placing them at his right hand, the position of honour. The fool degrades all that he should hold dear. C.

Ver. 9. That is, he that doeth these things fraudulently and violently, as in digging a pit, or breaking a hedge, ver. 8. C.

Ver. 11. This translation is founded on the general opinion of 'serpent-charming' by music being a reality and not a juggling imposition: a matter still undecided. May not the verse be translated, 'Surely the serpent will bite without hissing' (that is to give warning of danger): 'and a calumniator is no better?' C.

Ver. 16. Either really a child, a minor, under a selfish regency, living in luxury, and abusing their power; or one of those who are always children, and never attain to the majority of intellect, because never acquainted with the Son of God, who alone can make men free, Jn. 8. 32, 36. C.

Ver. 20. Solomon warns against an uncharitable thought, because it would soon break out into a voice, and certainly be discovered. And thus he admonishes, not for the sake of a factitious loyalty, but because he that frets himself into cursing the king will speedily be in danger of cursing his God. See Is. 8. 21.—Note, The bird is most probably a reference to the use of carrier pigeons for speedy and secret missives. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Men of character have need to be careful, lest they should inadvertently ruin it. Many are extremely ill qualified for the business they take in hand; and imprudently expose their own folly and wickedness. But it is very dangerous when either rulers or subjects leave their proper stations and attempt violent changes of the public settlement. Vain and imprudent talking is often attended with the most hurtful consequences. It is necessary then to have our words always with grace, seasoned with salt. An imprudent management of their business frequently robs men of both the comfort and the benefit thereof. But it is a great mercy for nations when rulers and subjects do all diligently and prudently attend to their proper work, and act according to their station, neither doing nor speaking evil, but provoking one another to love and to good works.

CHAPTER XI. Ver. 1, 2. Cheerfully lay out thyself to bestow the necessaries of life upon the poor, who are entirely unable to requite thee; and so God shall plentifully reward thee for it in this life, or in that which is to come. And however great the number of needy objects be, bestow that which is necessary upon them all, according to thine utmost ability; for the opportunity of liberality may soon be lost to thee, and an evil time may quickly come, in which thou wilt infinitely need God to be the supplier of thy own wants. 3, 4. He bestows plenty upon men, in order that with it they may do good to others. And however undeserving the objects be on whom they religiously bestow their charity, they shall not lose their reward.—They that withhold it till every objection be answered, will never bestow it. 5, 6. As thou knowest knowest not whether shall prosper,[3] either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

7 ¶ Truly[t] the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun:

8 But[n] if a man live many years, and rejoice in them all; [o]yet let him remember the days of darkness, for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity.

9 ¶ Rejoice,[p] O young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: [q]but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.[4] not how the human soul is created or united to the body, or operates in and on it, nay, nor even how the child is formed in the womb, even so thou knowest not how God may deal with thee, or thy estate: and therefore neglect no opportunity of doing or receiving good; and without any curious prying into futurity, leave it entirely to God to recompense thee. 7, 8. Life and its comforts are desirable: but let men enjoy created comforts as long as they may, the lasting period of troubles, death, and eternity will infallibly succeed, and manifest the emptiness and insufficiency of all outward enjoyments. 9, 10. Whatever temptations young persons may have to indulge their own foolish and wicked inclinations and fancies, let them remember, with the deepest concern, that God will, in his awful judgment, call them to account for every part of their conduct. Let them take care to prevent those perplexities and miseries which sinful indulgence will at last bring upon them; for all the empty and short-lived pleasures of youth can never in the least balance the dangers of inexpressible and everlasting misery.

10 Therefore[r] remove sorrow[5] from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: [s]for childhood and youth are vanity.

Ver. 1. Cast thy bread upon the waters. Some interpret thus: 'Cast thy bread-corn (seed) upon the waters,' as rice is said to be sown in Egypt; others, 'Sow thy bread-corn (seed) before the coming of the waters,' that is, before the rainy season. But as the word translated waters signifies multitudes, may not the meaning rather be, 'Cast thy bread (give forth thy spiritual instruction) before the face of the multitudes?" See Mat. 5. 1, as contrasted with the portions or more specific instructions prescribed in the second verse. C.

Ver. 3. The clouds of heaven water alike the desert and the garden, obeying chemical laws: and if a tree fall toward north or south, there it abides, obeying mechanical laws; how surely then should the intellectual and spiritual man obey the laws of his condition, and fulfil these beneficent purposes for which God has endowed him? C.

Ver. 9. This is no irony, as some have imagined: it is a simple and beautiful lesson. 'Rejoice in thy youth:' not in thy follies and lusts, 2 Ti. 2. 22. 'Let thy heart,' thine own conscience, and not vain companions, 'cheer thee' in thy course. 'And walk in the ways of thine heart'—thy conscience—not in the way of evil advisers; 'and in the sight of thine eyes'—not in the darkness of them that close their eyes, lest they should see, Mat. 13. 15. 'And know thou, God will bring thee into judgment'—the judgment, not of condemnation, but of 'Well done, good and faithful servant,' Mat. 25. 23. C.

REFLECTIONS.—What a plain, profitable, and important duty is that of giving to the poor! Nothing is a more certain mean of making men rich. No objections, drawn from our right to what we have, from the narrowness of our circumstances, from the discouragements which we have already met with in it, or from our not knowing how it can be made up to us, ought to make us neglect so much as one opportunity of charity. But, above all, it is most sinful and foolish for either old or young to indulge their lusts, and live unconcerned about Jesus Christ and his salvation, when heavy troubles, an important death, an awful judgment, and an endless eternity are before them, and they know not how near!

CHAPTER XII. Ver. 1. Now, in youth, seriously think of, believe in, and serve the Divine Persons, who made, preserve, and redeem men, before the disquieting and disqualifying infirmities of old age come upon you: 2. Before the comforts of life, which render it agreeable, be withdrawn, and the powers of your mind and senses of your body be rendered almost useless, and the calamities of old age rise successively one after another: 3. When your head, arms, and hands shall shake, through weakness or palsy; your once strong shoulders stoop, and your legs and thighs bow under their weight; your teeth be generally lost, and your eyes sunk in their sockets and become dim; 4. Before your lips be but a little opened to eat or talk, because of the loss or looseness of teeth; before you be incapable to walk in the streets; your rest broken, and every little noise awaken you; your lungs fail, your voice become inharmonious and harsh, and your ears dull and regardless of music; 5. Before you, unable to climb, become afraid to mount or move on high, nay, are afraid of falling in the common way; before your hair become white; the least noise or weight become burdensome, and the lightest food load your stomach; and there be no inclination to or delight in former pleasures, because you draw nigh to the grave and the other world, when your friends shall lament their loss, and the hired mourners publicly pour forth their pretended sorrows;—6. Remember your Creator, before the union between your soul and body be loosed, or the pith of your back and nerves be weakened; the vessel in which your brain and animal spirits are contained be rendered unfit for use; your veins and arteries, which convey the blood and vital spirits, be rendered unfit to convey them any more from the right or left ventricles of your heart; 7. And your body be laid in the grave, to moulder into dust, and your soul appear to be judged before God who formed it.—11. The words of the prophets, and other holy men of God, are fitted to excite men's attention, awaken their conscience, and quicken their affections; and to make a powerful and lasting impression on their hearts, and so settle and establish them in the truth;—being inculcated by zealous teachers of the church, sent and qualified by Jesus Christ, the alone Head of his church.

Ver. 3. Keepers. The hands become more or less palsy tic. Strong men—the vertebræ of the upright youth shall bend. The grinders—the teeth, a name by which the double-teeth are familiarly known. Those that look out of the windows—the optic nerves and humours of the eye. C.

Ver. 5. Afraid of ascents, because of debility. 'The almond-tree shall flourish'—the hair shall become white as the almond-blossom; or rather, shall fall off. 'The grasshopper' or locust, almost light as air that needs not his support, and instantly flies away. 'Desire' of food, company, music, fair prospects, &c. C.

Ver. 11. In ver. 10 the Preacher bears testimony to the purity and truth, that is, the plenary inspiration of the book which he is now completing. In ver. 11 he takes in a wider range. He testifies to the perfection of 'the words of the wise,' that is, of the whole of the sacred books then in existence. They are as goads, piercing sharp and deep. The second clause of the verse is not so clear. It is probable that there is here an example of that parallelism which is characteristic of Hebrew poetry, and that this clause corresponds with the preceding. Its meaning may be: 'The participators in the collection;' i.e. those who wrote or compiled the collection of sacred books, 'are as nails driven in.' The last clause of the verse states the origin of both the sacred books and the sacred writers: 'they are given by one Shepherd,' by the Lord. P.

REFLECTIONS.—Necessary and pleasant is an early acquaintance with Christ and his ways. But very absurd and dangerous are delays of spiritual concerns till old age, which may never be seen, and is a season very improper for commencing such care. Thrice happy are they who encounter the unnumbered infir-

12 And further, by [r]these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end; and much study[7] is a weariness of the flesh.

13 ¶ Let us hear the conclusion of the whole [8]matter; [s]Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.[9] mities and troubles of old age, and the fears and pangs of death, in the full assurance that Jesus loved them, and gave himself for them! But, alas! how difficult is it to persuade us of the emptiness of all created things! This truth needs to be inculcated a thousand times over. Nor will that avail, unless the Holy Ghost inscribe it on our heart. It is necessary then that all preachers should be sent and qualified by Christ and his Spirit; and that, by every possible mean, they should labour to fix the truths of God in the consciences, understandings, affections, and memories of their hearers. And let us, in our religious course, attend chiefly to the principal points; and always act under the awe, and in the faith and hope, of the last judgment.

14 For [t]God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

The most common view of the Book of Ecclesiastes represents it as 'a philosophical inquiry after the summum bonum, or chief good of man; in which Solomon states the various opinions on the subject, the result of his own dear-bought experience in search of the respective enjoyments of human wisdom and human folly.' Without altogether excluding this view, others think Solomon's main design was to 'prove the immortality of the soul, or rather the necessity of another state after this life, by such arguments as may be deduced from reason and experience.'

Now, in all this, it is not a little remarkable—it is not a little lamentable—that it never seems to have occurred to the learned authors of these opinions, that Christ and his church formed any direct object of Solomon's investigation! Yet how strange if the wisest man could have written a book in which the 'Wisdom of God' obtained no place!

'Much of the obscurity, it has been observed, which is generally admitted to exist in the book of Ecclesiastes, arises from not attending to the train of argument proposed by Solomon, which difficulty the ordinary division of chapters and verses is supposed to have contributed to increase' (Horne's Introduction).

Now that, like other portions of Scripture, the book of Ecclesiastes contains some or many things 'hard to be understood,' cannot be denied. But has not its peculiar obscurities arisen from neglecting the beams of 'the Sun of Righteousness' shining so brightly in all its pages, rather than from any inattention to the mere train of a philosophical argument? That Ecclesiastes is a book of argument is admitted; but not in any other sense than that in which the Epistles to the Romans, Galatians, and Hebrews are books of argument. That is, the statements, illustrations, and conclusions are never of man, but from the Spirit of God.

If by 'wisdom' is to be understood anything less than the knowledge that 'God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself,' 2 Co. 5. 19, then, indeed, is the book of Ecclesiastes not only obscure, but often unintelligible. But if the 'wisdom' sought and commended by Solomon be the knowledge of 'Christ, the wisdom of God,' then the obscurity of the book becomes illuminated, and 'he may run that readeth it,' Hab. 2. 2.

Another source of its obscurity may be found in the principle of interpretation ordinarily adopted—a principle neither warranted by anything in the book itself, nor by authority of any other book of Holy Scripture. This principle is the assumption that the book 'was written by Solomon in his old age, after he had repented of his sinful practices; and when, having seen and observed much, as well as having enjoyed everything that he could wish, he was fully convinced of the vanity of everything but piety towards God' (Horne's Introduction). Now, that Solomon wrote the book at an advanced period of his reign, is obvious from ch. 2. 4–11; but though all his recorded labours terminate in 'vexation,' there is not one single reference to any special 'sinfulness' in his pursuits—an omission totally inconsistent with the genius of Scripture, which never fails in the most direct acknowledgment and condemnation of the sins of its chiefest characters. Had the book, therefore, been a confession of sin and retractation of error, these must have furnished its most plain and prominent statements. Sin would have been called sin, and not mere 'vanity and vexation of spirit;' for these words, however strong and expressive, come far short of that self-abasement and abhorrence which the consciousness of sin against God must produce, whenever his Spirit leads the sinner to repentance. The conclusion, therefore, is inevitable—Ecclesiastes is neither an acknowledgment nor retractation of sin in the inspired author, but an illustration of the insufficiency of all 'treasures on earth' for the purpose of inducing men to 'lay up their treasures in heaven,' to 'set their affections on things above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God.'

But the chief source of obscurity may be detected in two principles that would reduce light itself into darkness,—the first, taking words in a sense the writer never intended,—the second, interpreting by figures of speech that he never employed. Examples of the first may be found in the meaning attached to 'good' in ch. 2. 24, and 3. 13, &c.; where the real good intended is commonly referred to unlimited sensual indulgence; and the second is exemplified ch. 11. 9, where a plain and godly admonition is commonly interpreted as a bitter irony.

In the preceding notes these arbitrary principles of interpretation have been altogether rejected; and, in subordination to the teaching of the Spirit, the book has been treated as its own expositor.—C.

THE SONG OF SOLOMON

Could not be a nuptial hymn composed in honour of any of his wives; for it was not composed till after the tower of Lebanon was built, ch. 7. 4; and so not till about twenty years after his marriage with Pharaoh's daughter. Many of the emblems used in it—as to be made a keeper of the vineyard, to have a head like Carmel, a nose like the tower of Lebanon, eyes like fish-pools, teeth like a flock of sheep, and to be terrible as an army with banners, &c.—if applied to a fine lady, are absurd to the last degree: but if the whole be understood of the union and fellowship between Christ and his people, it will appear most exalted, instructive, and animating. The name of God is not found in it, more than in Esther; nor could the continued allegory of the book well admit of it. But the agreement of its matter and language with other passages of Scripture—as Is. 54. 5; 62. 4, 5; Ho. 2. 19, 20; Mat. 25. 1–10; 9. 15; 3. 9; Ro. 7. 4; 2 Co. 11. 2; Ep. 5. 32; Re. 19. 7; 21. 2, 9; and especially with Ps. xlv.; its majestic style; its efficacy on the consciences of men for promoting their spiritual comfort and holiness; the sincerity of the bride in acknowledging her faults; and in fine, the general reception of it by the Jewish and Christian churches; sufficiently prove it inspired of God. To such as read it with a carnal and wanton mind, it will be the savour of death unto death: but to such as, acquainted with fellowship with Christ, peruse it with a spiritual and heavenly frame, it will prove a savour of life unto life, a counterpart of their gracious experience. It is a dialogue; in which the speakers are Jesus Christ, the blessed Bridegroom of souls: the church, which is his body and bride, and every particular saint in it; and the daughters of Jerusalem or Zion, who are either nominal professors of the true religion, or at best young and weak converts. The scope of it is to represent Christ and his people's mutual esteem of, desire after, and delight in one another. And as the bride denotes either the church in general, or a particular believer, the members, &c., attributed to her must have different significations assigned them, according as the one or the other is understood.

[The title of this book, 'The Song of Songs,' is generally understood to assert its eminence amongst or superiority over all other songs. Some eminent Hebraists, however, are disposed to translate the title 'The Series of Songs;' and this seems more consonant to the modesty of the sacred writer, who would be very unlikely to assume any special eminence, also to that equality which divine inspiration implies amongst the books of Scripture, as well as to the structure of the book itself, which changes so rapidly its speakers, time, place, and objects.

The ancient Jews, without exception, considered it a book divinely inspired, and inserted it in their sacred writings. By our Lord it was consequently [illegible] ized, when he exhorted the Jews to 'search the Scriptures;' and by Paul, when he affirmed that 'all Scripture is given by inspiration of God.' With the full conviction of its divine origin, it was newly translated into Greek, in the second century, by three eminent Christian divines; and in the third, it was inserted by Origen in his Hexapla, who also wrote some discourses explanatory of its sacred meaning.

Notwithstanding this concurrence, its divine authority is said to have been questioned in the fifth century by Theodore of Mopsuestia; and occasionally, down to the present day, various objections against its inspiration have been started by Christian divines. Now, without questioning either the objects or the principles of these objectors, it is not a little to be lamented that their learning has been so misapplied. For if the reception of the book by the Jewish church, and its approbation by our Lord and his apostles, be not, to a Christian, sufficient evidence of its divine authority, any higher evidence it must be impossible to obtain; and if this evidence is to be rejected in the case of one book, there is no ground for its sufficiency in the case of any other.

The objections to the divine authority of this book have arisen, as in the case of Ecclesiastes, from assuming an unauthorized principle of interpretation, and pronouncing the book a mere marriage song, and consequently unfitted for religious instruction. But again, whereas in Ecclesiastes, a book confessedly didactic, the ordinary and natural application of words has been rejected—in the Song of Solomon, a book confessedly written in similitudes or parables, the emblematic application of words has been rejected.

The Christian disciple will, however, make light of these cavils, and calmly repose upon the authentication of the book derived from Christ and his apostles. And while so reposing, he will find a treasury filled to overflowing with the unsearchable riches of Christ. He will be led into a banqueting-house of boundless hospitality; he will mingle with a company of purity and love; he will traverse gardens of loveliest flowers and sweetest odours; he will repose beneath trees with coolest shade and ripest fruits; thence will he climb the Lebanon heights of contemplation, and gaze upon the lovely land that lies beneath his feet, the land of his inheritance and his home, where Christ is the King, saints the subjects, and love the law; where the subjects themselves are kings and priests unto God, clad in the robes of the Lamb's immaculate righteousness, and crowned with the diadem of his unfading glory.

Some eminent interpreters have considered this book as a sacred drama extending through seven days, and have divided it into scenes, each of a day's continuance. Others have concluded it to be a succession of idyls, or little poems, with no connection of time, place, or person: but merely possessing some common object as their only principle of union.

In the following notes these principles of interpretation will be diffidently—on account of their authors—but firmly rejected, from their want of any but conjectural authority. The principles of interpretation adopted will be (1) The grammatical, including the singularity, or plurality, or sexes of the speakers. (2) Change of place. (3) Change of time. (4) Change of objects. (5) Change of sentiment or action. (6) The parallel—comparing spiritual with spiritual, explaining what here is unknown by what is elsewhere acknowledged. By following these natural principles, the book will be found a succession of beautiful, impressive, and instructive emblems of natural pictures, representing spiritual originals—an outward form of what is earthly, fabricated for little children, but with an inward spirit of what is only intended for perfect men. C.]

CHAPTER I. Ver. 2. Blessed Jesus, upon whom I have been meditating, by thy Word and Spirit give me intimate fellowship with thee in thy ordinances, and full assurances of thy friendship: for the manifestations of thy redeeming love are more pleasant, reviving, and strengthening to my soul than any created enjoyments. 3. Such is the pleasant and powerful influence of thy mediatorial excellencies, offices, relations, and fulness of spirit and grace, that sincere and holy souls cannot but love thee with their whole heart. 4. By thy almighty influence direct and bring me into the nearest enjoyment of thyself, that I, and others excited by me, may pleasantly comply with thy alluring power, and follow hard after thee in the paths of duty.—Jesus, the King of his church, has already brought me into the most ravishing nearness to and spiritual intimacy with himself; therefore will we rejoice in him as our ALL and IN ALL; we will think of, believe, and extol his love above all created delights: for every candid and sincere professor heartily esteems, loves, and delights in thee. 5. In myself, and in respect of manifold infirmities, scandals, reproaches, and persecutions, I am deformed; but in my Head Christ, and as clothed with his righteousness, and endued by his Spirit, gifts, and graces, I am truly comely, O ye nominal professors and weak believers:—I am outwardly mean, but inwardly rich and glorious. 6. Look not therefore upon me with disdain, disaffection, or delight in my distresses, nor stumble at religion on account of them; for sore persecutions, tribulations, and temptations are befallen me: hypocritical professors, false teachers, and my own inward corruptions, enraged at my connection with Christ, and my cleaving to him, have oppressed me with the basest drudgery, and entangled me in carnal cares and secular affairs, which have hindered me from, or retarded me in, the due improvement of my own office, opportunities, gifts, and graces. 7. But, O all-compassionate Redeemer, whom I love with my whole heart, and above everything else, discover to me, by thy Word and Spirit, which is thy true church, and which are those assemblies wherein thou art remarkably present, and to whom thou affordest spiritual support and consolation amidst all their scorching persecutions and troubles: for why should I, whom thou hast redeemed, and who have sincerely devoted my whole self to thee, be left to associate myself with empty professors, false teachers, and inward idols, who, notwithstanding their pretences of friendship, are thy enemies and rivals on earth!

CHRIST. 8. O ye excellent ones of the earth, beautified with my salvation, righteousness, and grace, and whose church state is adorned with my ordinances, if your knowledge of duty be still indistinct, inquire after, observe, and follow the example of the saints in former and present ages; and let weak believers and young converts, with their weak or languishing graces, carefully attend my public ordinances dispensed by my faithful pastors. 9. And be encouraged in my love; for, notwithstanding the weakness which you feel, and the self-deformity which you discover, I your Redeemer and Husband have, and will render you comely and active, and will give you sufficient strength and courage to withstand and conquer your spiritual enemies, if you will only be faithful. 10. Whilst your church state is beautifully adorned by divine oracles, ordinances, gifts, and graces, professors, and ministers, your particular conversation before the world appears beautifully marked with a variety of precious and holy qualities, and your faith, by which you are united to my person as your Head, is precious and glorious in itself, and is productive of every good word and work. 11. And I, my Father, and the blessed Spirit will for ever continue and increase these spiritual ornaments in true believers.

BELIEVERS. 12. O that we may enjoy these blessed and ornamenting operations of thy grace! For, whilst thou, Jesus, dost converse familiarly with us in thine ordinances, how pleasant are thy promises and truths to our heart, and how vigorous and active, and acceptable to thee, are our implanted graces. 13. And, even during the night of trouble or time, how delightfully art thou, our beloved Husband, found in the public and private ordinances of thy grace, and art entertained by the most cordial embracements of our faith and love! 14. O what an inexpressibly delightful and precious system of excellencies, fountain of graces, source of blessings, repository of promises, treasure of pardoning, healing, comforting, nourishing, quickening, and refreshing influence, art thou to our heart!

SUPHENIAH ROAD—A SCENE IN THE MOST BEAUTIFUL CITY OF KING SOLOMON'S DOMINIONS. [Song of Solomon, i:1.]—The above is a picture of a road in Supheniah, a suburb of Damascus. This is given here because it illustrates a scene in the dominion of Solomon. Damascus was one of the wealthy and beautiful cities in his kingdom. In passing from Jerusalem to Palmyra, the city Solomon built in the wilderness, Damascus would be on the direct route, and in going to Palmyra to-day tourists usually start from Damascus. In the respect that Damascus and Palmyra occupy oases in the midst of surrounding deserts, they are alike. There would be no Damascus were it not for the Abana river. The stream breaks through a gorge in the Lebanon mountains a few miles above the city, and at once begins a warfare with the desert. For 25 miles the conflict between the river and the burning sands of Syria is expressed in a luxurious and tropical vegetation.

CHRIST. 15. How comely and glorious is my church, as endowed with ordinances, and reformed by my Word and Spirit; and how adorned with intelligent, sincere, peaceful, peace-proclaiming, and faithful pastors, who search into gospel truths, and watch over, direct, and go before every individual member of it. And how certainly, and eminently comely, is every believing soul clothed with my righteousness, and endowed with my grace! How quick and discerning their spiritual understanding! How chaste, sincere, and single their affections, without the least glance of spiritual whoredom!

BELIEVERS. 16. But, blessed and divine Husband, what is all my derived comeliness in respect of thine, in thy person, offices, relations, and grace? How delightful are all these to my heart! How pleasantly glorious is thy promise, and the ordinances of thy gospel, for the conversion and consolation of souls, and for rendering them fruitful in good works! 17. And strong, durable, and lasting is thy church, in which I am honoured to dwell, and consists of such parts and members as keep the faith; and permanent are all her oracles, ordinances, and offices.

Ver. 2. The word me shows that the bride 'the Lamb's wife,' Re. 21. 9, is the first speaker; thy, addressing her, shows that the virgins, the church in her state of waiting and progress, reply. See Mat. xxv. C.

Ver. 5. I am black as the tents of Kedar—an humble acknowledgment of sin, in which words the bride speaks; but comely as the curtains of Solomon, a recognition of the sin, but an assertion of the beauty of faith and repentance, in which words the virgins speak. C.

Ver. 6. Look not upon me, &c. She speaks as a village maiden, accustomed, as all village maidens are in the East, to work in the vineyards; and so exposed to the burning sun that her skin was dark when compared with the fair daughters of Jerusalem. Though tanned with the sun she was still beautiful. What a noble figure of the church! Bearing the marks of the world's toils and persecutions; yet showing on every feature the lineaments of heaven. P.

Ver. 7. There is here a new picture, changing from a banqueting-house to a shepherd gone after his flocks. 'Why should I be as a stranger by the flocks of thy companions?' Why should I, as a stranger, follow any teacher, any spiritual feeder, but my Lord? C.——Eastern shepherds always lead their flocks to some shady spot, if possible beside a fountain, and leave them to rest there for one or two hours during the fierce noonday heat. This is a favourite time for the shepherds themselves to meet with their friends and to recline under shade of tree or rock. P.

Ver. 9. I have compared thee, O my partner. Not for personal accomplishments, but for costliness and beauty of ornaments: 'even the ornaments of a meek and quiet spirit, which is, in the sight of Heaven, of great price.' C.

Ver. 10. The maidens of Palestine wear an ornament composed of gold coins strung together in a row so as to overlap like scale-armour. It passes over the head, down each cheek in front of the ear, and is fastened under the chin. Instead of coins, thin discs of gold and silver were used in ancient times. They also wear numerous chains of gold or silver round the neck. The words of the text are therefore descriptive of a maiden decked in her ornaments. It is also worthy of note that fully caparisoned horses have their bridles covered with little plates of the precious metals, and have also numbers of chains and amulets strung round their necks. How graphic therefore are the words, 'I have likened thee, O my love, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots!' P.

Ver. 14. Camphire. The camphire is a plant, the Lawsonia inermis of botanists. Of the dried leaves an unguent is made, called henna, with which the females of Syria and Egypt dye their nails. Its flowers have a sweet perfume, and eastern maidens often place bunches of them in their bosoms. The plant is still found at Engedi. P.

REFLECTIONS.—How precious and pleasant Christ is to believing souls! Ardently do they pant after further communications of his grace; sensible that they can do nothing of themselves, but Jesus must do all in them and for them. He takes the sweetest delight in speedily answering their prayers, and satisfying their souls with his loving-kindness; though often, amidst his kind visits, their outward state is such as lookers-on are apt to stumble at. With what pain and grief do lively saints lament the want of frequent and intimate fellowship with him and his people in the ordinances! But he is ready to direct and comfort them in this condition. He has done, and will do, for them the most amazing things, in furnishing them with his righteousness, his grace, and his glory. All their life, their strength, their grace, their comfort, their happiness come from him. His heart is full of high esteem and unbounded affection for them. And, through familiar fellowship with him, they receive and enjoy his comforting, sanctifying, and blessed influence.

CHAPTER II. CHRIST. 1. I am indeed glorious in my person as God-man, and in my mediatorial relations, estates, and works; and am infinitely comely, refreshing, and medicinal to every believing soul. 2. And partaking of my comeliness, righteousness, and grace, thou, my church, art incomparably more excellent and useful than all the societies, and true believers than all the persons on earth.

BELIEVERS. 3. But infinitely more my beloved Jesus excels angels and men in everything gracious, glorious, and operative. Often have I, under the covert of his righteousness, love, power, and providence, fearless of danger from heaven, earth, or hell, believingly viewed, admired, and applied to my soul, his person, offices, and relations, with all the pardon, peace, acceptance, adoption, sanctification, comfort, and endless glory, which flow therefrom! 4. Powerfully has he admitted me to partake of his fulness, in the most ravishing manner, in his Word and ordinances. And the manifestations of his love have effectually protected me from enemies, and encouraged and animated me to my spiritual work and warfare. 5. Ye ministers and fellow-professors, often have I needed your sympathy, direction, and comfort, under my sad perplexity and desertion. But, oh! if you could now help me to bear up under these ravishing discoveries and communications of Jesus' love! Oh for further and unspeakably more enlarged enjoyment of him, to strengthen me for supporting under, and improving what I have; 6. But why do I ask your assistance? While I enjoy the true, the delightful, and intimate embraces of an incarnate God, and have the joys of his promise imparted to my soul, his word, power, and grace marvellously uphold, delight, and invigorate my heart. 7. I therefore charge you, my fellow-professors, by everything kind, pleasant, or delightful, that ye disturb not my fellowship with him, nor do, nor cause me to do, anything which may provoke him to withdraw this sensible visit of his love. 8. Lo! though he had withdrawn, yet I now hear his voice, in the ministry of his Word and motions of his Spirit. Behold, he comes removing and triumphing over every hindrance of my fellowship with him! 9. Behold, in the most lively, lovely, and affectionate manner, he comes forward in the influence of his grace, and unto an actual assumption of our nature! Behold he, the substance of all our ceremonies, manifests his glorious and gracious excellencies, through them, and vouchsafes some obscure and transient glimpses of himself in every ordinance! 10. In what a heart-melting manner he said to my soul, Rouse up thyself from thy partial deadness, sloth, and security, and disentangle thyself more fully from the snares of the world and thy own lusts. Exercise thy faith in the most active, bold, and assured degree, in partaking of the most delightful fellowship with me: 11. For all impediments, arising from the wrath of God, the guilt or dominion of sin, or from terrible troubles, are now removed. 12–14. Now are come the days of power and times of love, in which the dispensations of the gospel are attended with almighty influence, and multitudes are, to their everlasting joy and comfort, converted to me, and rendered fruitful in good works. Arise, therefore, my poor, meek, chaste, but often persecuted bride; let no despondency, no sense of thy unworthiness, deter thee from approaching my presence in prayer and other holy duties: for both thy person and services are accepted by me, and are inexpressibly amiable in my sight. 15. And while ecclesiastical rulers take pains, both by doctrine and discipline, to free my church from false teachers, even those who have but begun to vent their errors and irregularities, as they greatly mar her purity, peace, order, and beauty, and are especially apt to mislead weak believers, let every one be careful to search out, and mortify his own inward lusts, as these, if indulged, break up the work of grace in their hearts.—16. This kind inviter is my glorious Husband and Mediator, given of God to, and accepted by, me; and I am his by the Father's goodness, his own love and conquest, and by my surrender of myself to him. And O the infinite delight he takes in his people, and to converse with them in his ordinances! 17. Till the gospel day, in its pleasant light and powerful influence, break, and the shadows of Jewish ceremonies flee away; nay, till the day of perfect glory dawn, and all the shadows of desertion, temptation, and trouble are fled; do thou, blessed Jesus, often surprise me with the discoveries of thy glory and communications of thy grace, notwithstanding whatever hindrances, guilt, and wickedness are found with me.

14 ¶ O[w] my dove, [x]that art in the clefts of the rock, in the secret places of the stairs, [z]let me see thy countenance, let me hear thy voice; for sweet is thy voice, and thy countenance is comely.

Ver. 1. 'I am a wild rose of the fields, a lily of the valleys.'—Such a humiliating description as every self-examining believer will give of himself in comparison with the attainments of others. C.

Ver. 3. Judea is not celebrated for the apple, but its citrons were reckoned superior to those of all other lands; and the citron is therefore most probably the fruit-tree of this emblem. C.

Ver. 7. I charge you. This cannot be any form of adjuration, which would be both superstitious and impious. The reference is to the timidity of the startled gazelle, and the fleetness with which it escapes when disturbed in its slumbers. Spiritually, it inculcates 'praying, waiting, and watching,' for the Lord's coming in providence and grace. C.

Ver. 10–13. From verse 10 to 13 is presented one of the most beautiful emblems of Christ, by his Word and Spirit, inviting the soul of a believer, or the whole church, to arise from sleep, Ro. 13. 11, and follow him. C.

Ver. 14. The emblem here changes to a scene descriptive of the safety of the believer, or the church—defended as by a rock, and hid in the 'secret places of the precipices.' C.——In this verse the dove—not the turtle-dove, but the pigeon—is the emblem selected. Its favourite haunts are the clefts of the rocks, and the retired recesses of the steep stair-like ravines. From these its soft cooing is heard during the spring season. P.

Ver. 16. He feedeth among the lilies. 'Let him feed (his flock) among the lilies.'—The emblems of believers, adorned with grace and endowed with righteousness without their own merit, Ro. 3. 20–28; 4. 4–6. C.

REFLECTIONS.—O the unbounded glory and infinite usefulness of Jesus Christ, and the glory and usefulness of his people as connected with him! What must be the immediate enjoyment of God and the Lamb, when the imperfect and mediate enjoyment on earth is sometimes so transporting! Unhappy for ever is that heart which would change one hour's fellowship with Christ for all the pleasures, honours, and riches on earth. Tenderly should it be managed, and carefully improved and maintained. A small thing may interrupt it; and with the greatest reluctance and grief should the believing soul mourn over its want. Strong as death must be the love of our Redeemer, which makes him come to his people over every mountain of distance, darkness, wrath, provocation, and pollution. How earnest and affecting are his invitations to familiar intercourse with himself! And what a change in the world is made by his oracles, ordinances, and influence! But wicked ministers in a church, and carnal lusts in a heart, are our greatest plagues, and should be carefully removed. And the assured faith of our relation to Christ will make us effectually to long and cry for frequent and familiar fellowship with him.

CHAPTER III. Ver. 1. In time of desertion and trouble, and of a secure and slothful frame, in prayer and other private ordinances, I endeavoured to regain the sensible communications of Jesus' love: I persevered therein, but without any discernible success. 2. Stirring up myself therefore to a more active and lively frame of spirit, I attended the public ordinances of his worship, in order to obtain communion with himself. I often repeated my endeavours, but met with nothing but disappointments and discouragements. 3. Faithful ministers, who with care and labour inspect the souls of men, were often directed to speak pointedly to my case, which encouraged me to open it to them in familiar conversation, and beg their assistance in furthering my fellowship with him. 4. Not resting in duties and ordinances, by faith I essayed still more earnest and immediate application to Jesus himself. He graciously vouchsafed me his sensible presence. Then my heart clave to him by a lively exercise of faith, and by the most ardent and resolute affection. I carefully avoided everything which tended to disturb our fellowship or provoke his withdrawment; and not only laboured to get intimate enjoyment and full assurance of his love to myself, but to have his promised presence in the church and the public ordinances thereof. 5. I therefore again charge you, my fellow-professors or saints, to avoid everything which may in the least tend to mar my intercourse with him.

DAUGHTERS OF JERUSALEM. 6. What amazing persons are those who, separated from the world in affection, and delivered from former troubles, mount up heavenward in faith, in love, in spiritual-mindedness, and in holy desires and conversation;—all acceptable to God through Jesus' merits and intercession, and endowed with the manifold and precious graces of his Holy Spirit!

BELIEVERS. 7, 8. Nay, admire not us, nor the glories which we have freely received from Christ; but behold that new covenant of grace, and that familiar fellowship with him, which are the causes of everything amiable in us, and in which we are watched over and protected, amidst all our dangers, by almighty perfections, attendant angels, and vigilant ministers. 9, 10. Behold how, according to his deep compassion and universal love, he has not only assumed our nature in the most precious and useful form, but has formed a new covenant, and a gospel dispensation,—reared on stable, precious, and supporting promises,—founded in the unchangeable and everlasting love and purpose of God, in which men are protected by his righteousness and royal power; and his unbounded love makes everything proper, refreshing, and supporting for the members of his church, in order to transport them, in fellowship with him, through this world into the heavenly state! 11. Go forth then, my fellow-professors, from your unregeneracy, your self-righteousness, your filthy lusts, your carnal cares and sluggish frames; and with earnestness, faith, love, and wonder observe Jesus, our Prince of Peace, not only crowned by his Father with the highest glory and honour, but even by all the true members of his church, in their acceptance of him, and submission to him, as their Husband, Saviour, and Lord; particularly in that day of power, and time of love in which, to his inexpressible satisfaction, they are united to him by faith.

Ver. 1. 'In the night.'—That state of comparative darkness in which the believer and the whole church are still surrounded. See Ro. 13. 11, 12.—I sought him in his Word for direction, and in his promises for support.—I found him not. The seeker does not say, I believed him not, but 'I found him not:' because for more exercise of faith and faithful seeking, he calls the soul (the church to add to private contemplation and prayer the observance and use of Christian converse and public ordinances. See ver. 2. C.

Ver. 6. REFLECTIONS.—In this world the clearest days of intimate fellowship with Christ are suddenly turned into nights of desertion, trouble, ignorance, and sloth. But precious and dear is Jesus to lively saints;—nothing can content them without his presence and favour; and they count no labour nor suffering too hard to obtain it. Great is his love to them. He is loath to contend long with his people lest their spirit should fail before him. And an hour, a minute of his presence, richly rewards all their pains and sorrows in seeking for it. Promising is the appearance when the Word preached pointedly touches the heart and conscience of hearers, and leads them to careful inquiries concerning Christ. And remarkable fellowship with him effectually animates to an earnest wrestling in behalf of the church and public interests of religion. What extensive honour believers procure to themselves from all around them by an earnest care to maintain fellowship with him, and to follow him in a gracious, upright, and heavenly conversation! But if distinguished saints be so admirable and lovely, how much more is Christ himself and his covenant! With great care ought we to labour to have the heart and eyes of all around us fixed on him: for great indeed is his love, that he should take pleasure in espousing to himself poor, guilty, polluted, diseased, wretched, and mischievous sinners of mankind.

CHAPTER IV. Ver. 1–5, 7. Behold how glorious is the state of my church decked with ordinances, officers, and saints! How comely is she when ministers, her lights, or eyes, are intelligent, modest, humble, and holy, walking in all godly simplicity!—when converts, rooted in me as their Head, grow up in grace and perfect holiness in the fear of the Lord—feeding on the rich pastures of my Word, and surrendering themselves acceptable sacrifices to God!—How comely is she when ministers, who prepare spiritual nourishment for others, are sound in their doctrine, holy in their conversation, harmonious and meek in their behaviour, and active and successful in winning souls to me!—when their ministrations mark the soundness of their hearts!—when their dwelling on redemption through my blood, as their principal theme, renders themselves and their ministrations lively and pleasant; and when, with modesty, singleness, prudence, and order they, and other rulers, govern the flocks committed to their care!—when they, as superior to others in station, and as means of connecting them with Christ, and of conveying their spiritual nourishment, are upright, steady, and strong, and do watch over the church, and actively improve the whole armour of God for her defence and honour!—and when her various oracles, ordinances, and officers are remarkably useful for supplying the souls of men with the nourishing milk of God's Word!—But especially how fair and comely are believers, with respect to their personal capacity, when justified by active faith, and adorned with every spiritual grace!—when their spiritual knowledge, faith, and affection are sincere, single, humble, and seasonably discovered!—when their conversation in thought, word, and deed, notwithstanding many imperfections, is orderly and pure, manifesting a heart nourished in the pastures of the gospel!—when, by repeated acts of faith and meditation, they improve their spiritual provision; and their zeal for God is uniform, pure, and moderate, animating them to a fruitfulness in good works, and in winning others to me!—when their prayers and converse are profitable and pleasant, discovering the soundness of their heart, animated, and furnished by, and accepted through my blood!—when there is much secret and holy blushing on account of remaining defects!—when their faith, which unites them to me, furnishes with and really improves the whole armour of God for their defence from spiritual enemies, as the worthies of God formerly experienced!—when, feeding upon the doctrine of the prophets and apostles, they, to my inexpressible pleasure, abound in faith and love towards me, and in care to instruct and edify others!—How completely perfect are they in their justification, in the extent of their sanctification, and in my purpose and favourable acceptation. 6, 8. Till not only the gospel dispensation, but even the glorious millennium, and the resurrection to everlasting life, come, I, according to thy request, ch. 2. 17, will continue to bestow my special presence and influence in my church, which is rendered so delightful by my ordinances, and by the precious graces, prayers, and praises of my people.—Let therefore every one spiritually espoused to me there attend, and hold intimate fellowship with me, setting their affections on things above; forsaking the most excellent creature-satisfactions for my sake, shunning the intimacy of carnal, covetous, and violent men, and even the fellowship of superstitious, erroneous, and persecuting churches. 9, 10. O redeemed soul, partaker of the same human nature with me, begotten and adopted of my Father, and spiritually betrothed to my person, how, even with the weakest acts of thy faith, and the smallest degree of sincere grace and holy obedience, hast thou claimed, attracted, encouraged, and coupled my heart to thee! How incomparably acceptable and delightful is thy love, and that sweet fragrancy flowing from thy manifold graces! 11. How delightful thy prayers and praise! Thy instructing, reproving, and comforting discourse marks what sweet and nourishing truths and experiences are lodged in thy heart, and how delightful and attractive is thy holy and benevolent conversation! 12–14. My church is a delightful garden, separated from the world, set apart to the service of God, digged by gospel ministrations and influences, and especially protected by my providence, by the rules of order contained in my Word, and a medicinal spring of gospel truth hid from the view of a carnal world! And when purged of scandalous persons, her converts planted in the new kingdom do flourish more fragrant, delightful, precious, and useful, more numerous and different in circumstances, than all the fruit-bearing trees and spices of an orchard!—Yea, every particular believer is a garden set apart in beautiful order, and with infinite care and labour, to the service of God; and has in him the Holy Ghost and a principle of grace, as a well of water springing up into everlasting life: and in the most pleasant manner are their various gifts and graces exercised to my honour, their own advantage, and the edification of others.

BELIEVERS. 15. Blessed Jesus! great source and bestower of all life here or hereafter, it is to thy influences alone that we owe all our comeliness, fragrancy, and fruitfulness! let them run more abundantly into our hearts, that, by the exercise of thy grace, we may be rendered more useful to water and refresh others around! 16. And since we are thine, as well as under our own care, prevent everything tending to mar our fruitfulness; and let the Holy Ghost, in his convincing and sin-mortifying as well as in his comforting influences, stir up and quicken our hearts to a lively exercise of those gifts and graces with which we are endowed. And do thou, O Jesus, manifest thy presence in thine ordinances, and accept of and delight in those graces and good works which are wrought in us by faith in thyself.

Ver. 1. My love—'my Partner.' 'Thine eyes are doves' (see ch. 1. 15) behind thy vail.'—'Thine hair as a flock of goats.' They must have seen the beautiful hair of some of the Asiatic goats who would appreciate this comparison. C.

Ver. 2. None is barren. 'None is companionless,' an allusion to the correspondence of the upper and lower teeth, upon which both their beauty and utility so much depend.—Note, Personal beauty, like the other gifts of God, is good, and may, if not abused, be used for most gracious purposes. The details of personal beauty form, accordingly, most appropriate emblems of those gifts of the Spirit wherewith Christ adorns the believer and his bride the church. C.

Their waters are limpid, sparkling, and of icy coldness. The streams and fountains of Lebanon are proverbial throughout Syria as emblems of luxury and pleasure. P.

REFLECTIONS.—What infinite love Jesus bears to all people! He puts upon them his own comeliness, when they exercise a living faith in him. Earnest is his desire of their company: and soon shall they be with him where he is, to share his happiness and honour! Never, but when he went to suffer, did he say, Let these go their way. They are a good savour of Christ to all around or above them. And when they rightly behold their own comeliness in him, it effectually humbles them, and makes them ascribe all the glory to him, and to cry for more abundant supplies of his sanctifying influences. Surely it is the greatest honour for them, as his peculiar property, to keep themselves entirely for his service.

CHAPTER V. CHRIST. 1. At thy request, believing soul, I vouchsafe my special presence in my church and ordinances. I have with pleasure observed thy lively preaching, and cordial application of my precious and soul-nourishing truths. I have particularly observed and accepted the graces and services of believers. Let them also feast abundantly on my gospel provision, and take the comfort of their graces and works, as evidences of their faith and great salvation.

BELIEVERS. 2. Alas! the dull and lukewarm frame in which Jesus often finds his churches when he comes to bless them! And how slothful and secure my animal nature had made me, even while my spiritual endeavoured to hear and entertain him! Amidst much deadness and unconcern, I felt some impressions made upon my heart by his Word, Spirit, and rod; while he, in the kindest manner, besought me to exercise my faith and love, and to remove whatever hindered his most intimate approaches, as he was closely related to me, had suffered much for me and from me, had waited long for my opening to him, and was much grieved with my neglect of him! 3. In the most pitiful manner I evaded compliance with his kind invitations, as a thing I was not at present fitted for, and which I could not do without crossing my corrupt inclinations and troubling my flesh. 4. By the immediate power of his Spirit, Jesus touched my heart through his Word, and kindly stirred up my affections to a concern for my former slighting of him, and to an earnest desire after his presence. 5. Repenting of my former stupidity and indifference, and actuated by his influence, I prepared myself to entertain his visit; my faith and other graces put themselves into active and vigorous motion for the removal of everything that tended to hinder his access to my soul. 6. Notwithstanding my vigorous actings of faith upon his self-giving promises, and panting desires after him, I did not obtain any sensible manifestations of his presence. My heart was then filled with pain, grief, and shame at the remembrance of his slighted invitation. I carefully attended his ordinances, public and private, in order to seek and find him: but met with nothing but frowns and disappointments. 7. When ministers touched my case in their discourses, they but raised my hopes and increased my anguish: by their harsh reproofs, calumnies, and persecutions, they wounded and distressed my soul. They whose duty it is to prevent everything tending to disturb the peace and edification of the church questioned the truth of my profession, and charged me with the vilest hypocrisy. 8. O! my fellow-professors, I beg and charge you, that if this my Lord Jesus allow you any sensible intimacy with himself, you will represent to him the distressed case of my soul, and entreat him speedily to visit me, who earnestly desires him, and am at the point of death for want of his sensible presence.

DAUGHTERS. 9. Distressed, but precious and lovely saint, what means this so solemn charge? What singular and transcendent excellency is in this Jesus, the beloved of thy heart?

BELIEVERS. 10. Boundless and incomparable is his excellency! A glorious Godhead and a suffering manhood, a holiness of heart and life, and a bloody suffering, a glorious exaltation, and a humble debasement, mercy towards his people, and judgment against unbelievers, concur to render him in every respect a miracle of beauty! He is infinitely more dignified, kind, rich, and glorious, than all the ten thousands of created beings in heaven and in earth; and, as the great standard-bearer, he goes forth, attended by angels and saints, conquering and to conquer. 11. In his divine nature, and as he is the Head of government and influence to all people, he is pure, precious, substantial, glorious, useful, enriching, and unchangeable! Lasting and immutable is his comeliness! Beautiful, mysterious, and majestic are his well-connected purposes and providences! And ever fresh and comely those societies of saints which are rooted and grounded in him! 12. Pure, penetrating, pleasant, beautiful, and comforting is his all-seeing knowledge and his tender pity and care! 13. Delightful the manifestations of his love, glory, and grace! His words are gracious and comfortable, continually refreshing, quickening, and supporting to the souls of his people! 14. Perfect, glorious, and lasting, and all managed with infinite skill, are his munificent liberality, almighty power, and marvellous works, particularly of grace! Sincere, lasting, and wisely ordered for the good of all people, are his great purposes of love, his tender bowels of mercy and compassion, and his sympathizing intercession! 15. Sufficient and wisely exerted are his strength and power to bear or act in the work of our redemption!

14 His[e] hands are as gold rings set with the beryl; [g]his belly is as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires:

15 His[h] legs are as pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold; [i]his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars:

16 His[j] mouth is most [3]sweet; [k]yea, he is altogether lovely.[4] This[l] is my beloved, and this is my friend, O daughters of Jerusalem.

CHAPTER VI.

1 The church professeth her faith in Christ. 4 Christ showeth the graces of the church, 10 and his love towards her.

WHITHER is thy beloved gone, [a]O thou fairest among women? whither is thy beloved turned aside? [b]that we may seek him with thee.

2 My beloved is gone down [c]into his garden, to the beds of spices, to [d]feed in the gardens, and [e]to gather lilies.

3 I[g] am my beloved's, and my beloved is mine: he feedeth among the lilies.[1]

4 ¶ Thou[h] art beautiful, O my love, as [i]Tirzah,[2] comely as [j]Jerusalem, [k]terrible[3] as an army with banners.

5 Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome [4]me: [l]thy hair is [m]as a flock of goats that appear from Gilead:

6 Thy teeth are as a flock of sheep which go up from the washing, whereof every one beareth twins, and [o]there is not one barren among them.

7 As a piece of a pomegranate are thy temples within thy locks.

8 There[p] are threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number

9 My[q] dove, my undefiled is [r]but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one[5] of her that bare her: [s]the daughters saw her, and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her.

10 ¶ Who[t] is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon, clear as the sun, and terrible [u]as an army with banners?

11 I[v] went down[6] into the garden of nuts, to see the fruits of the valley, and to see whether the vine flourished, and the pomegranates budded.

12 Or[w] ever I was aware,[7] my soul made me like the chariots of Ammi-nadib.[8]

Skilfully contrived, and firmly fixed on the precious and durable foundations of his grace, are the dispensations of his providence! Elevated, stately and pleasant, always verdant and refreshing, is the full manifestation of him in all his excellencies! 16. Pleasant is his Word and the sensible communications of his love! Nay, all that is in his person, offices, relations, names, blessings, and ordinances is inexpressibly desirable; and nothing is truly desirable but as in or connected with him. This, this, O fellow-professors, is my spiritual husband, and my constant and sympathizing lover and benefactor.

Ver. 1. This verse complies with the closing invitation of the preceding chapter, and represents Christ delighting in the feast of his church, and inviting all that follow him to participate in his joy, Jn. 3. 29. C.

Ver. 2. Open to me, my sister. The emblem of our Lord standing at the door and knocking, and waiting for the opening of the closed door, Re. 3. 20. C.

Ver. 3. Two excuses easy to be understood by those who observe that it is not Christ personal but Christ representative that now knocks for admission, see Mat. 25. 40, 45. And when the hungry, the thirsty, the naked, the stranger, and the imprisoned have knocked and called, how few will be able to plead that they have never hesitated to rise, and never invented a plausible excuse for neglecting to open the door! C.

Ver. 7. The watchmen that, by their faithful preaching of the truth, found out (detected) the lately negligent, but now aroused and anxious seeker; they smote, they wounded the conscience, and they took away the vail of every plausible excuse. C.

Ver. 16. He is altogether lovely. Independent of its inspiration and its emblematic object, this description must present to the eye of an unprejudiced artist an imagery of most unequalled range, the product of a mind fraught with universal information. Its chief topics of comparison are (1) Colours; (2) Officered armies, ver. 10; (3) Precious metal; (4) Ornithology, ver. 11, 12; (5) Botany, ver. 13; (6) Jewelry, ver. 14; (7) Architecture; (8) Landscape, ver. 15; (9) Attractive eloquence, ver. 16. Every province of nature and art thus furnishing its tribute to the King, the 'Lord of all!' C.

REFLECTIONS.—Quickly, when entreated, does Jesus come to comfort the hearts and supply the wants of his people; and brings with him for their refreshment the fulness of promises, grace, and joy. Enlarged appetites after spiritual blessings are necessary for gospel hearers. But it is strange that even saints should refuse his gracious visits, for which they had earnestly prayed and patiently waited. Hard is the heart that remains untouched by his affectionate calls; base is the temper which renders men careless about him and his influences; and shameful and frivolous are the best excuses which can be made for evading his visits. It is indeed impossible for people wholly to exclude him from their heart; and they procure for themselves great grief and toil by neglecting to entertain his offered kindness. But it is base for ministers to act imprudently and untenderly towards those whose spirits the Lord has wounded. More dutiful and profitable is it to strive in prayers for one another. And how pleasant when, even under desertion, saints maintain the most exalted view of Jesus' person and fulness, and the most assured faith of their interest in them; and when even curious inquiries concerning him draw forth the warmest commendations of him!

CHAPTER VI. DAUGHTERS. 1. Precious saint, tell us where we may hope to find this thy beloved Saviour, that we may, after thy example, and in holy fellowship with thee, more heartily than ever seek him.

BELIEVERS. 2. Jesus, my beloved, is always present in his church, and is especially conversant in those assemblies where the graces of the people are most eminent; taking pleasure in and increasing their grace and comforts, and delighting to convert, and afterwards glorify, all who accept him. 3. And notwithstanding all my miscarriages, the mutual relation between him and me is as full and firm as ever; and he still delights himself in the assemblies of his people.

CHRIST. 4. In respect of oracles, ordinances, officers, and order, thou, my church, art extremely beautiful in my view, and terrible to enemies around. And in respect to real righteousness, glorious grace, and holy conversation, thou, O particular believer, art transcendently comely, and thy assured faith and fervent prayer overcome every opponent. 5–7. Such was my delight in the vigorous actings of thy faith and love, and in thy importunate prayers, that I could no longer absent myself; and being returned, I assure thee, for thy comfort, that thy holy thoughts and gracious exercise, thy unfeigned and operative faith, thy spiritual meditations, thy regular and active zeal, thy humility and self-abasement, together with all thy privileges, and everything belonging to my church, are as precious and comely as ever. 8, 9. Whatever beauties there be in earthly courts, there are none comparable to a true saint. In the one true church, nay, in one heavenly-begotten soul, there is more real comeliness than in all the world beside; all those of principal esteem, in either church or state, are disposed to express their approbation of it. 10. Gradual was the increasing light and glory of the church in her patriarchal, ceremonial, and gospel periods. Gradual and diversified is the growing comeliness and glory of every believer who truly turns to the light: they shine as the morning light, going on to perfection. In their borrowed and imperfect holiness they show fair as the moon; and in their genuine righteousness shine clear as the meridian sun; and, armed with the whole armour of God, they are terrible to every opposer. 11. Such is my regard to my church that, even while absent from thee, I was occupied among my outwardly mean but inwardly glorious and hidden ones, carefully observing if her fruitfulness in saints and in good works was answerable to her new-covenant soil, and how her various members did thrive in the advanced progress or weak beginnings of grace. 12. And thy vigorous actings of faith and fervent supplications took such hold of me, that I was constrained, as in a surprising transport of affection, speedily to return to thee in loving-kindness and in tender mercies. 13. Notwithstanding every former offence, return, therefore, my perfect and peaceable one, by faith and repentance, to thy wonted familiarity with me, that I and my Father, and blessed Spirit, and ministering angels may, with pleasure and satisfaction, behold thy beauties. However mean and worthless thou art in thy own eyes, yet how pleasant is it for me to behold Jews and Gentiles united into one society of saints, and to contemplate heavenly graces and holy duties withstanding and conquering the remains of inward corruptions, temptations, and fears!

Ver. 1. O thou fairest. This character of superlative female beauty, like the panegyric on male beauty, ch. 5. 10, &c., should have led every expositor to see that the book was never intended for any daughter of Eve; to any one of whom it had been the grossest flattery, alike degrading to the deceiving utterer and the credulous listener. But how literal the description when applied to her who is adorned by the Spirit with 'the beauty of holiness!' C.

Ver. 5. Turn away thine eyes. That is, thine eyes suffused with tears from seeking and suffering, ch. 5. 6, 7; see Ps. 116. 8. C.

Ver. 8. This is no enumeration of Solomon's family establishment, as it does not accord with the account in 1 Ki. 11. 3. It is an emblematic classification of the church, in which queens, concubines, and virgins are exactly equivalent to the triple classification, 1 Jn. 2. 12–14, fathers, young men, children. C.

Ver. 9. That is, the church in its progressive tripartite condition on earth, saw and praised the church in its glorified and perfected condition in heaven, as the most wondrous monument of the wisdom and grace of its Lord. C.

Ver. 11. The speaker in the first person from ver. 4 has been the bridegroom; and after the question, ver. 10, he resumes ver. 11. This must be the key, ver. 12, in which, not the bride, but the bridegroom speaks, saying, 'or ever I was aware'—before I had time for farther inquiry—'my soul,' my strong affection, 'set me on the chariots of my willing people'—the people promised to Christ 'in the day of his power,' Ps. 110. 3, and whom 'the love of Christ constraineth' (carries along with him) to judge and live, 2 Co. 5. 14. C.

Ver. 13. Shulamite. The Hebrew feminine of Solomon; 'the peaceful and the perfect.' —The company of two armies. The word Mahanaim is applied to the two bands into which Jacob divided his family, also to the two hosts of angels that he saw, Ge. xxxii.; and may well represent the two bands of 'Jews and Gentiles' in the church, Jn. 10. 16, and the correspondent 'ministering spirits sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation,' He. 1. 14. C.

REFLECTIONS.—The believer's hearty commendations of Christ are glorious, when blessed by him, to return, that we may look upon thee. What will ye see in the Shulamite? As it were the company of two armies.[9]

8 I said, [q]I will go up to the palm-tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof: now also thy [r]breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the [s]smell of thy nose like apples;[6]

10 ¶ I[u] am my beloved's, and his desire is toward me.

11 Come,[v] my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages:

12 Let[x] us get up early to the vineyards; let [y]us see if the vine flourish, whether the tender grape appear,[1] and the pomegranates bud forth: there will I give [z]thee my loves.[2]

13 The [a]mandrakes[3] give a smell, and at our gates are [b]all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my beloved.

2 I[c] would lead thee, and bring thee into my mother's house, who would instruct me: I [d]would cause thee to drink of spiced wine of the juice of my pomegranate.[2] make others inquire after him. And it is prudent for deserted saints frequently and boldly to recognize the mutual relation betwixt Christ and their soul. Great is the mercy that, though he often for a time deserts a particular child, he never totally forsakes his church and ordinances, and often does much good while it is little perceived. How sweet and often surprising are the returns of his sensible presence! For unchangeable is his esteem of, love to, desire after, and delight in all people amidst all the changes of his countenance and providence. Engaging, honourable, and awful are the beauties of holiness when they shine in churches, ordinances, and saints. And unbounded is Jesus' care about all people, and to have them fruitful in graces and good works. He daily seeks to return them his sensible favours, and to see them cordially united among themselves, and valiantly contending with their spiritual enemies.

CHAPTER VII. 1–6. Thou, O my visible church, art adorned with ministers shod with the animating preparations of the gospel of peace;—ministers fixed in the most noted station, and contributing to thy inward health and fruitfulness;—strong in grace, and confirmed in the truth, and set for the defence of the gospel;—intelligent in the mystery of Christ, and sagaciously watching against thy spiritual foes.—Thou art also adorned with manifold oracles and ordinances, for the spread of my honour, the communication of my influences, and edification of my people.—How beautiful, O heaven-born soul, are thy affections and conversation, through the powerful influence of gospel truth! Glorious are thy inward principles of holiness, and first motions to good, wrought in thee by the Holy Ghost! Thy gracious desires are supplied with nourishing influences from above! Plentiful provision, and fruitfulness in holiness, is obtained by the digesting of my word in a particular application of it! Living on the breasts of inspired oracles and instituted ordinances, how glorious and attracting are the exercises of thy faith and love, and of thy holy endeavours to edify others! A sure and precious defence is thy unfeigned and vigorous faith! Clear and distinct is thy spiritual understanding in the matters of God! Wonderful is thy gracious sagacity in discovering truth, and discerning between good and evil: and attended with courage and watchfulness, especially against the most near, constant, and malicious enemies! Grounded in my blood, and effectually productive of good works, is thy towering hope supported by thy faith! And acceptable in me is even the very smallest part of thy holy principles or practices! 7. So affecting is thy beauty, bestowed by myself, that I cannot but regard thy fellowship, and take pleasure to look on, and abundantly delight in thee.—When the whole of thy graces and holy conversation is considered in connection, how comely, flourishing, victorious, and heavenly is the appearance! And how cordial and cheering to me are thy affection and kind entertainment; 8, 9. In my purpose I resolved, and in my promise I have sought, to manifest myself to my church, in converting nominal members, and vouchsafing my kindest fellowship to real saints.—This shall qualify thee to edify others, and give pleasure and satisfaction to me. Revived, refreshed, and comforted, by my influences, thy gracious discourse shall quicken and awaken others to taste of my love, and to open their mouths in my praise.

BELIEVERS. 10. O the inexpressible comfort which I enjoy in the faith of Jesus' relations, and in the intimations of his love to my soul! 11, 12. Beloved Redeemer and husband, let me, retiring from the hurry and cares of this present world, have the most ravishing and permanent fellowship with thee! Let me, without delay, not only have a deep concern for the spiritual prosperity of the church, but have an intimate and distinct knowledge of the condition of my own heart, and see whether my graces be weak or strong, flourishing or languishing. In this our retired communion will I discover the sincerity and fervency of my affection to thee. 13. While the precious, savoury, and medicinal truths of the gospel are to many a savour of life unto life; and while lively believers all around me begin to flourish and spread their heavenly influence; the inward graces of my heart show themselves in lively exercises; and everywhere new degrees of grace, and new acts of holiness, are added to the former: all which are, at thy command, set apart for promoting thine honour and service!

Ver. 1. Shoes. The shoes or sandals are noticed first, as the emblem of 'the feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace,' Ep. 6. 15.—The joints of thy thighs, &c. 'The mouldings of thy limbs are as ornaments, the workmanship of a skilful hand.' C.

Ver. 4. Heshbon was the capital of Sihon; and amidst its ruins a beautiful pool of water still exists. But is not the meaning of the emblem to be found rather in the meaning of the words, which abides, than in any work of art that might soon be destroyed? Heshbon signifies thought; Bath-rabbim, the house of the mighty; that is, 'Thine eyes are pools (bright depths of intelligence and power.' C.

Ver. 5. 'Thy braided hair is like the royal purple festooned around the ceilings.'—Note, The word here translated galleries is also (ch. 1. 17) translated rafters: it has also been translated ringlets. The precise meaning of the word is uncertain; but, from its relation to beams (ch. 1. 17), and the fact that eastern ceilings are generally of boards, it has here been rendered ceilings. C.

REFLECTIONS.—Extensive are the beauties of holiness in the church and people of God, and fixed and uniform in the substantials thereof. What delight Jesus takes in the persons and services of his followers! He is ready to hold the most intimate fellowship with them. And with ravishing pleasure they glory in him, and in his love towards them. When inwardly warmed by his love, how ready are they to relinquish everything else, in order to have familiar intercourse with him! And a deep concern for the church of Christ, and exact observation of our inward condition, effectually promotes our endeavours to honour him.

CHAPTER VIII. BELIEVERS. 1. Blessed Redeemer, O that that happy period were come, in which thou shalt assume our nature, and be a member of our visible church, and, in consequence thereof, admit us to the most intimate fellowship with thee! Then, without regard to reproach or persecution, should I openly profess my reverence, subjection, and affection to thee. 2. Instructed by thy Spirit, I should spread abroad the knowledge of thee in the extended gospel church, and all my gifts and graces should be employed to serve and glorify thee. 3. O the infinitely transporting, the intimate, the endearing, the strengthening and supporting fellowship that I should enjoy with thee! Nay, already the believing views of it fill my soul with the joys of my Lord! 4. Let me therefore once more charge you, my fellow-professors, to do everything in your power to continue this my delightful communion with Jesus Christ, and do nothing to interrupt it.

DAUGHTERS. 5. What admirable person is this, who, forsaking all worldly things for Christ, and delivered from her distressed condition, mounts up heavenward, by faith resting on him to bear her up under every burden, and forward through every duty and difficulty?

BELIEVERS. O Jesus, animated by thy own delightful influence, I have, by importunate prayers, obtained the most sensible manifestations of thy love; as others, in whose hearts thou art formed by faith, have also done. 6, 7. O let thy most endeared esteem, remembrance, and love of my soul, appear remarkably in all thy dispensations towards me: for so vehement and irresistible is my desire after intimate fellowship with thee, that nothing else can afford me satisfaction: no, not death and the grave are so dreadful to me as the fears of thy withdrawment! Kindled by thy love shed abroad in my heart, my love to thee melts all my inward powers, and burns up my corruptions. No affliction, temptation, desertion, or persecution can extinguish or abate it. Would the richest on earth tempt me from thee, with all his wealth, nay, with ten thousand worlds, I would utterly contemn and abhor the proposal. 8. But, Lord, we have many fellow-sinners, whom thou didst die for; particularly among the Gentiles, who enjoy no ordinances, and are yet unripe for their spiritual marriage, being destitute of faith and love; what shall we do to promote their conversion, when the offers of thy grace shall be made to them?

CHRIST. 9. When, according to my unchangeable purpose, they shall accept me as their foundation, I and my Father and blessed Spirit will endow them with manifold gifts and graces, and render them, in their hearts and church state, a firm tower and beautiful temple and palace for God. When the door of access to me shall be opened to them in the gospel, and the door of their heart opened to receive me, we, notwithstanding their insignificancy, weakness, troubles, and temptations, will thoroughly beautify, strengthen, and protect them.

BELIEVERS. 10. Indeed, blessed Redeemer, by thy infinite favour, I have been united to thee, and stand firm on thee as my foundation, and am come to some maturity and perfection in grace. 11. Thou, Lord Jesus, the infinitely wise and wealthy Prince of Peace, hast secured by thy blood, planted and purified by thy grace, sown with thy Word, and protected and managed by thy providence, the large vineyard of thy church. This thou hast committed to the care of thy gospel ministers, that they, by instructions, warnings, reproofs, and censures, might endeavour to their utmost to render the members fruitful in the works of righteousness, to thy praise and glory. 12. And, while the whole concerns of it are under thy special care, I have in charge the vineyard of my own heart, to watch over, defend, purge, and render fruitful in holy habits and exercises. Thou, Jesus, must have the principal honour of all that I am, have, or can attain to, and thy faithful ministers their subordinate share of my love and regard.

CHRIST. 13. Believing soul, who lovest and frequentest the assemblies of my people, and ordinances there dispensed, thy fellow-members regard and listen to thy instructions and warnings for their edification. Let me, when withdrawn from thee, particularly in my bodily presence, often hear thy prayers and praises, and the publication of my gospel in the world.

BELIEVERS. 14. And, O my blessed Husband and Saviour, not only maintain frequent and familiar intercourse with my soul, and with thy church on earth, in the instituted ordinances of thy worship, but hasten, hasten thy glorious appearance without sin unto our salvation;—when we shall be caught up to meet thee in the air, and shall, in one complete body, enter that happy, that eternal state, in which God shall be ALL in ALL.

Ver. 2. I would cause thee, &c. 'Thou shouldest accustom me to give thee spiced wine, with the juice of pomegranates.' C.

Ver. 5. I raised thee up. I revived thee, when left a helpless infant under the citron-tree. See Eze. 16. 4–8. In this reply the BELOVED speaks. C.

Ver. 6. For love is strong. 'Yea, love is strong,' &c. This is the reply of the Beloved who supports.—Jealousy, 'burning love'—cruel, rather, 'inexorable'—vehement flame, rather, 'the dissolving fire of Jehovah.' C.

Ver. 8. The grammar of the passage suggests that the 'daughters of Jerusalem,' who speak (ch. 1.–v.), who are still present (ch. 8. 4), are here the solicitous projectors for the welfare of the 'little sister.' This emblem has been expounded of the Gentile church—but it seems much more natural to understand by it such as are yet 'weak in the faith,' Ro. 14. 1; 15. 1; 1 Co. 3. 2; Ep. 4. 13. C.

Ver. 10. This has generally been considered as the answer of the 'little sister,' exemplifying full and instantaneous 'growth in grace.' But as the grammar will not warrant any change from the speaker in the first person (ver. 1, 2, 4) and the speaker in the first person (ver. 10), this must be understood as the language of the bride, encouraging the 'little sister' by her own experience of grace and attainments in faith. C.

Ver. 11. Baal-hamon, ruler of multitudes.—The keepers represent the rulers and instructors of the churches in their multitudes.—A thousand. As the annual rent for a vine seems to have been ordinarily a piece of silver, Is. 7. 23, the emblem indicates that return of 'fruit of the Spirit,' Ga. 5. 22, which is ever due in correspondence to privileges. C.

Ver. 13. Thou that dwellest in the gardens. It is impossible by the grammar to distinguish the speaker in ver. 13 from the speaker in ver. 14; and as in ver. 14 she calls to the listener, my Beloved, the speaker is the bride calling to her Redeemer, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus!' Re. 22. 17, 20. C.

REFLECTIONS.—How kind, how marvellous is it, that God's only begotten Son, the brightness of his glory, has, by his assumption of our nature, become our brother, and will for ever continue bone of our bone and flesh of our flesh! And great is the mercy, that to him the gathering of the Gentiles hath and shall be! It is pleasant to remember past experiences of his love in the assured expectations of others still more sweet! And delightful is the frame, ardent the desires, and fervent the prayers, when a soul is overwhelmed with the consolations of Christ! Importunate intercession for the spiritual welfare of others often produces remarkable fellowship with him. Extensive revenues of holy thoughts, words, and deeds are due from every member of the church to Jesus Christ. And they who give him his due, will give his ministers theirs. But how strongly Christ and his people's hearts must be knit one to another! They cannot live but as it were in mutual intercourse. Soon will he come to take them to himself in glory; and, in the believing view of it, their waiting spirits cry, 'Even so, come, Lord Jesus.'

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

Three points present themselves to the Christian reader and student in the preceding book:—

I. Was this book received into the canon of Holy Scripture, and sanctioned by our Lord and his apostles? To this there can be but one answer—it was.

II. Are there, in the New Testament, any such evident references as form a key to its interpretation? Such evident references may be found, Mat. 21. 33, when comp. with Song 8. 11; Ep. 5. 27, comp. with Song 4. 1, 7; Ep. 6. 15, comp. with Song 7. 1; Re. 3. 20, comp. with Song 5. 2. Other references have been suggested, but these are so evident as not to admit of question.

III. Are there such quotations of passages of Scripture parallel to or identical with the Song of Solomon, by which its spiritual import can be unquestionably established? The answer to this question is easy and direct. (1) By referring to He. 1. 8 there is found a direct address from God the Father to God the Son. (2) That address is quoted from Ps. 45. 6. (3) It is impossible to overlook the complete parallelism, nay identity, of that psalm with the scenery and character of the Song of Solomon. Therefore, by following the scriptural plan—comparing spiritual with spiritual, and the natural law of all interpretation—rising from what is plainly stated, granted, or ascertained, to what is less plain, questioned, or yet unknown, there can be no difficulty in coming to the conclusion, that the Song of Solomon forms a succession of emblems whereby the mutual love and union between Christ and his church are described for the instruction and comfort of believers.

That the Song of Solomon is capable of ready and great perversion, by 'men of corrupt minds,' is undoubted. For, whilst 'to the pure all things are pure,' so to the impure all things are impure. And such is the state of the carnal mind, that just in proportion as any object is good, in like proportion may it be perverted to purposes of evil. Thus—just in proportion as a medicine is powerful to restore, may its improper administration render it powerful to destroy. And thus grace, in its every form, may be turned into licentiousness. But is the sufferer, therefore, to be deprived of a powerful medicine?—or is the physician who discovered and prescribed it to be pronounced an evil-doer? Is the sinner, therefore, to be deprived of access to pardon; and the God of all grace and consolation to be disrobed of his attribute of mercy? No. And neither is the church of God to be deprived of some of the brightest pages in the divine Word, because eyes that have 'loved darkness' cannot perceive their beauties.

To those who have observed what a prominent place love to Jesus holds in the New Testament (see for example, Jn. 14. 23; 1 Co. 16. 22; 2 Co. 5. 14), and to those who have experienced and rejoiced in 'the assurance' of that love—the Song of Solomon will ever furnish a subject of study, at once most delightful and profitable.—C.

The various modes of interpreting this remarkable and extremely difficult book may be classified under three heads:—The Literal, the Typical, and the Allegorical.

1. The Literal makes the book a simple story related in the form of a dramatic poem. The facts of the story are given by Dr. Ginsburg as follows:—'A village girl, the daughter of a widowed mother of Shulam, is betrothed to a young shepherd, whom she met whilst tending the flock. Fearing lest the frequent meetings of these lovers should be the occasion of scandal, the brothers of the Shulamite employ her in the vineyard on the farm. Whilst on the way to this vineyard she one day falls in with the cortége of King Solomon, who is on a spring visit to the country. Struck with her beauty the king captures her, conveys her to his royal pavilion, then conducts her to Jerusalem in great pomp, in the hope of dazzling and overcoming her with his splendour, and eventually lodges her in his harem. But all is in vain. True to her virtuous love, she resists all the allurements of the exalted sovereign, spurns all his promises to elevate her to the highest rank, and in the midst of the gay scenes assures her humble shepherd, who followed her to the capital, that her affections are sacredly and inviolably pledged to him. Solomon, convinced at last that all his advances are in vain, allows her to quit the royal residence. Hand in hand the two faithful lovers return to her native place, and on their way home visit the tree under which their love-spark was first kindled, and there renew their vows of constancy and fidelity. On their arrival they are welcomed by their companion shepherds, and she is rewarded by her brothers for her exemplary virtue.' It is said that the object or moral of this charming story is 'to teach a lesson of practical righteousness by the record of an extraordinary example of virtue in a young maiden in humble life who encountered and conquered the greatest temptations from the most exalted personage in the land.' The theory is attractive, and the arguments employed in defence of it are not without weight; but I think the thoughtful student of God's Word, and especially such as have studied the genius of oriental poetry and imagery, will see that there is something higher and nobler in this book, than such a moral lesson. And, besides, I cannot see that the various parts of the book can be made at all to harmonize with such a simple and detailed story. In my mind the imagery is too sublime, the descriptions of far too elevated a character, to be applied even by an eastern poet to any mere narrative of real life.

2. The Typical theory of interpretation adopts as a basis the historical truth of the narrative, making the bride either Pharaoh's daughter, or some maiden of Palestine, whom Solomon had loved and married; but then this bride typified the church, and Solomon typified Christ, while the whole story was designed to represent in prophetic imagery the love subsisting between Christ and his church—a love mutual, indissoluble, and eternal. The great difficulty in the way of this theory is to establish the historical character of the narrative. A type must be a fact; and the narrative here has all the characteristics of ideality as distinguished from reality. No writer, however poetical, would describe ordinary events in such language as is employed in ch. 2. 1–4, 14; 6. 10–12; and no writer, even in the East, would put such language in the mouth of a virtuous maiden as we find in ch. i. ii. viii.

3. The Allegorical interpretation of the book seems to me to be the only possible and true one. The poem is conceived in the loftiest style of eastern imagery. Incidents of real life, events of everyday occurrence, customs which still prevail in the East form a groundwork, but they are all idealized and spiritualized, so that they may more strikingly exhibit to the pure and spiritual mind, grand divine truths. The leading image is common in Scripture. Human love in its purest and holiest type—that of husband and wife—is the symbol of the love of Christ and his church, of God and his people. Thus Isaiah says, 'Thy Maker is thine husband: the Lord of hosts is his name,' ch. 54. 5; and still more clearly: 'For thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and the land shall be married. . . . As the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee,' ch. 62. 4, 5. The forty-fifth Psalm greatly resembles this book in style and imagery. So also the same imagery is common in the New Testament: 'I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ," 2 Co. 11. 2. The whole bearing and force of that beautiful passage in Ep. 5. 22–33 rest upon this same figure. The apostle John too, in the last book of the Sacred Canon, appears to embody the very idea of the Song of Solomon, when he records his glorious vision: 'And I John saw the Holy City, New Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband.'

This is substantially the system of interpretation which was adopted generally by the Jews, and is developed in the Talmud. By them, of course, God is represented as the Beloved, and the people of Israel the loved one. In the early Christian church, the same view was taken, and was held almost universally until impugned by Erasmus. It appears to me to be in accordance with the analogy of Scripture, and with the genius of eastern poetry. The whole structure of the composition, too, discursive, yet having a subjective coherence, tends to the same conclusion. There is in it no sustained plot, no crisis of a story. It consists of expressions of most devoted affection, with reference to localities and ever-changing scenery, all adapted to call forth new emotions, and to exhibit unalterable love. Viewed in this light, interpreted in this manner, it is one of the purest and noblest portions of Holy Writ. It lifts the mind into an ideal world of spiritual communion with God in Christ. It shows us his tenderness, his watchful care, his devoted unceasing attachment to his people in all their waywardness, temptations, sorrows, and persecutions, such as we can see nowhere else. It shows us that friends and kindred—the nearest and dearest, may desert us in the hour of trial, but God will not and cannot, for love binds him to us and us to him by a tie that is indissoluble.

Yet, still, holy, pure, and comforting as this book is to the man whose nature the Spirit of God has mastered, the profitable reading of it by the ordinary Christian is confessedly difficult. Each one knows his own heart, and can best review his own feelings. But in this western land, where we are not accustomed to the gorgeousness of eastern imagery, or the nature of eastern life and manners, we need watchfulness, prayer, and a heart completely under the control of the sanctifying Spirit, if we would derive from this book those noble lessons which God intended it to embody and impart.

It is sometimes said that the Song of Solomon is not quoted or referred to in the New Testament, and that therefore it cannot have that high spiritual significancy which I have above advocated. In reply I quote the words of Hengstenberg:—'The New Testament is pervaded by references to the Song of Songs, and all of them are based on the supposition that it is to be interpreted spiritually. Proportionally no book of the Old Testament is so frequently referred to, implicitly or explicitly, in the New Testament, as this one; and we cannot but be surprised at the superficiality or the prejudices of those who have asserted that the Song of Songs is never quoted in the New Testament.' The following passages afford ample proof that its language and spirit were constantly before the mind of our Lord and his apostles, Mat. 6. 28–30; 13. 25; 24. 42, 21. 33; 26. 6–13; Mar. 14. 3; Lu. 12. 35–37; 13. 31, 32; 7. 38; Jn. 6. 44; 7. 33, 34, 12. 3; 21. 16; 3. 29; 2. 1–11; Ep. 5. 27.—P.
